"ON THE ROAD."

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY O. D. V.

"Want a horse? That's what I want, sir,
You can bet your bottom rock;
I don't want no played out clam, sir,
What I want's the best of stock;
I'm just agoin' for to jog out,
And to see 'the boys' to-day,
So as I'm but goin' to see, I
Guess I'd better take the bay.

"He looks nobby, don't he, Johnny?
Just about our size and fit—
Check him up a little tighter:
He don't mind it—not one bit;
Jump in, Johnny. Look out, boss, there,
Or the horse'll kick that pup—
Hurry up, John. What's the matter?
Ready! Well sit down. Git up!

"What's that! Let him step up faster!
Not till we get out the Park—
If the peelers see you trot fast
You'll soon find it ain't no lark—
Seven miles an hour the law says,
So I'll hold a tighter rein—
Best you know to haul him in, John,
Till we get to Harlem Lane.

"Now we're out the Park, and, Johnny,
You'll see fun afore we're through;
This ere horse can trot, I bet you—
What's that? Don't care if I do.
That's not bad lush, is it, Johnny?
See that sorrel! She steps good—
She can make her pace two forty,
She's a mare of forthluck.

"Well, let's take another hist, John—
Whoa there! or the whip you'll take,
Try to mend this horse's pace, and
He is sure to go and break;
There's a snorter, ain't it, Johnny?
Just right size and not too bulky—
That driver seems in a cheerful humor,
And yet we see him in a sulky.

"Stop in here, we'll take a drink, John;
That's good stuff, too, ain't it, hey?
Let us have another round, Boss,
I could drink a barrel to-day.
What say? Hey! I've drank too much now?
Never mind, I'm on a bust.
How much? These hotel men are the Only ones who'll take our dust.

"Fetch that horse up. Now we'll have a
Ride as is a jolly ride—
He's a fast one. Ain't he, John?
What's that? Fast when he's tied?
Here! you take the reins; I'll whip him.
G'lang! Get up there. Seldom fed—
Ain't this high, John? (hic) G'lang there!
Look! That tree! I've smashed my head.

* * * * * * * * *

"Where's the wagon, John? Do you know?
Gad! my head feels like a load.
Damn those trees; they should'nt grow 'em
In the middle of the road—
Goin' home without the buggy;
I'd most rather have a hidin'—
Let's take a drink, then take the cars, John,
I DON'T SEE NO FUN IN RIDIN'."

CHAPTER XI.

A PROMISING YOUNG LADY.

"I tell you what, Miss Anna, it is by far too humiliating that a gentleman, principal dancer and occasional ballet master of one of the most important London theatres, should be obliged to give lessons by stealth in this sort of way."

The speaker was a slight dapper and very little man, with his feet very much turned out.

"Either I am a dancing master or I am not; and certainly I am not ashamed of my profession," added the gentleman, who occupied a line in the play bills as Mr. Alphonso Skipjak.

And his words were addressed to a very good looking and showy young woman.

"Don't be cross, Mr. Skipjak," she said; "it will not be long so—and soon I hope to be able to receive your lessons quite openly and to care nothing about who knows it."

"Oh, my dear Miss Fubbs——"

"Don't mention that name, Mr. Skipjak; its vulgarity horrifies me. How my mother could have stooped to marry a man by the name of Fubbs has been a matter of astonishment to me from my very earliest infancy. Never call me Fubbs again, Mr. Skipjak."

"Don't call me Skipjak, and I won't call you Fubbs. Call me Alphonso, and I will call you Anna."

"Very well, Alphonso."

"Oh, charming Anna! No actress ever before possessed so lovely a waiting woman, and the first time I beheld you behind the scenes of our theatre, with Miss Lucinda Mordaunt, I said to myself, never before have I beheld so radiant a vision of beauty!"

"Oh, Alphonso," said the waiting woman, and receiving the compliment as one to which she was fairly entitled.

"Your simple and modest costume could not hide from me that you were adorable," exclaimed the dancer.

"Ah," said Anna, with an indignant toss of the head, "because Miss Mordaunt herself is fond of dressing plainly, she compels me to follow her example and make a fright of myself."

"You could not do that, charming Anna, try how you would—Oh, no, no! And what is it that you require to eclipse our most haughty Junos? Nothing but a little paint, a gauze petticoat and tinselled skirts. All that, with a little talent——"

"You will give me the talent, Alphonso."

"Yes, Anna, I will. You are at present but an imperfect nymph, but I, my adorable Terpsichore, I will give you wings! Say the word and I will make you Mrs. Skipjak——"

"I don't like the name."

"It's a decided improvement on Fubbs, at any rate. Come, come, say the word, and your Apollo will install you in his Olympus, two delightful little attics, number nine Gray street."

"Ah," thought Anna, and sighed, "that is not the sort of high life to which I aspire."

The dancer saw that she did not appear very greatly delighted with his proposal, and, feeling rather vexed, said:—

"I hope, I am sure, that my love does not frighten you!"

"No," replied Anna, "it isn't that, it's the attics."

"Well, but you know, my angel, I shall soon have my salary raised and then we could live a little lower—to say nothing of your talent, which I would soon make so great that——"

"Stop, Alphonso. You are not at all bad-looking, and certainly I rather like you, but it is not a pair of attics that I am dreaming about. No, it is a splendid mansion with magnificent apartments and a perfect love of a boudoir; and, besides all that, bankers, ambassadors and princes hovering round to worship me, just as it is with Miss Mordaunt."

"What an ambitious waiting maid," thought Skipjak.

"Only," pursued Anna, "my mistress receives all those great people at one and the same time; now, for my part, I don't like a crowd."

"When those great lords offer her flowers and diamonds she takes only the flowers and that makes them miserable; but, in order to please them, I would take both flowers and diamonds and as many of the latter as they chose to offer."

"But in your brilliant mansion you would forget me and all that you owe me."

"Really, I can't say."

"Anna," sentimentally exclaimed Alphonso, "I feel that you would become ungrateful."

"I am very much afraid that you are right," said Anna, a little regretfully.

And the dancer shook his head reproachfully.

"Just listen to me, Alphonso," continued the waiting-maid, "love is all very well, but to be rich is perfectly delightful! Ah! if I were in Miss Mordaunt's place, instead of resting contented with only my salary, I would have been already worth a million; I don't know how, but so it should have been."

"Oh, indeed! And then——"

"Well, then, I would endeavor to make it two millions."

"And then?"

"Then, I believe that I should want three."

"And then you would go on all your life in that sort of way?"

"Yes," said Anna, decidedly, "all my life just so."

And, as Skipjak returned his violin to its case, he said to himself:—

"It's very easy to see how she will turn out."

"Ah, Alphonso," cried the ambitious waiting-woman, "what a pity you are neither a French ambassador nor a Russian prince."

"Well, Anna, I may be either a Frenchman or a Russian, for I believe I was born somewhere abroad."

"Very likely, but unfortunately you are neither a prince nor an ambassador."

"Well, I think not."

"And you are not worth even half a million."

"Decidedly not!"

"And every night I dream that some great lord is running away with me in a beautiful postchaise with four horses; I don't know where he is taking me, but certainly it is not to those two delightful little attics, No. 9 Gray street.

She laughed mockingly—and thus did Skipjak commune with himself:—

"Beauty and spirit, but no heart; she is a young woman that will go the pace; if I allow her to escape me now it's quite certain I shall never catch her again."

"Well, John, what is it?" sharply cried Anna, and addressing a footman who had just entered the room.

"Here is a young woman who says she has been told to come by Miss Mordaunt."

"Send her here."

And then turning to Skipjak, Anna told him to take himself off as quickly as possible.

"I shall see you this evening at the theatre," said the dancer; "for I suppose you will be there to dress your mistress?"

"Certainly," replied Anna, "—unless——"

"What?"

"Unless I should dream whilst wide awake," she laughed.

Alphonso tucked his fiddle case under his arm and hurried away in a very depressed state of mind. Almost immediately a very pretty and very neatly dressed young woman appeared, who walked very tenderly over the soft and springy carpets, looking down at her feet and watching every step she took.

"Oh, how pretty," she exclaimed. "Are people allowed to walk on this beautiful carpet."

"Ah," thought Anna, "these are nothing to what I will have some day or other."

And then she said aloud, very patronisingly:—

"Yes, yes, you needn't be afraid; what can we do for you, young woman?"

And the young woman laughed to herself as she ran her eyes over the patronising waiting woman, and said:—

"Excuse me, but isn't it you who are the waiting maid?"

"Yes, I am," sharply cried Anna, "and what then?"

"Well, young woman," retorted the other, and imitating Anna's manner, "a little while ago I was in Pall Mall, and just as I was crossing the road I found myself, I don't know how, before a beautiful carriage and horses, when I say before it's a manner of speaking, for I was under."

"Oh, my goodness!" exclaimed Anna.

"Oh, but, I wasn't hurt; the coachman was clever, and so were his horses—they stopped directly, and such a beautiful young lady jumped out of the carriage and helped to pick me up, and when she found I wasn't hurt she asked me some very curious questions——"

"What did she say?" hastily interrupted the waiting woman."

"You never mind about that," was the reply.

"Well," cried Anna, sharply and indignantly, "you come here with a story that I am not obliged to believe——"

"Well, you can do as like about it——"

"At any rate, I think I have a right to ask who you are, and where you come from?"

"Well, if you must know, I am Mrs. Colston, and my husband is Mr. Peter Colston, and he is a ladies' shoemaker, and our shop is in Pembroke street."

"You are not going to tell me that Miss Mordaunt has promised you her custom?"

"Suppose she had, would that be very astonishing? My husband is a first rate workman, the work isn't skimpt at our place, and a pair of our boots or shoes always last six months at least."

Anna Fubbs tossed her head with great disdain.

"My mistress wears out a pair of shoes every day."

"Then she must walk on razor blades, I should think," cried Mrs. Colston. "But as far as that goes, if she likes to pay the price we will make her shoes that won't last half an hour. However, the fact is that after asking me a few questions, your mistress threw her arms round me and kissed me out in the open street——"

"Bless my heart alive, how remarkable," exclaimed the astonished waiting woman.

"Well, I did think it rather droll. Then she told me where she lived and asked me to go to her house and wait till she came. She does live here, doesn't she?"

"if you mean Miss Lucinda Mordaunt——"

"Yes, that's the name. I say, is she the actress that the people are so often talking about and saying that she is so wonderfully clever?"

"The very same."

"Well, I have come, and here I am, waiting for her. I shan't be doing any harm if I sit down a bit, shall I?"

Several voices were at that moment heard, and Anna, hurrying to a door which opened on a large gallery, said:—

"No, no, you can't stay here, young woman, for there are some gentlemen, some of Miss Mordaunt's visitors, and they are coming this way."

Mrs. Colston, who had followed the waiting-maid to the door, exclaimed:—

"Oh, what fine gentlemen, and how beautifully they are dressed, and look at their boots. I don't think my Peter could turn out such beauties as those. But, I say, what do they all want here?"

"They are coming to pay court to my mistress," said Anna.

"What, all that lot?"

"Yes."

"Well, I shouldn't like to be bothered with so many of them," laughed the shoemaker's wife.

"There, there, go along, and I will let you know as soon as my mistress has returned."

"Thank you, kindly," said Mrs. Colston, and, as she was shown into an adjoining room, thought to herself:—

"To have so many lovers as that seems to be very droll, and, of course, it can only be for a bit of fun. For my part, I never had any other sweetheart than Peter, and never thought about having any more."

The gentlemen with whose appearance the unsophisticated Mrs. Colston had been so greatly struck were four in number. The highest in rank and the most important to our narrative was Lord Henry Lyttleton, who was about five-and-twenty years of age, with a handsome face, remarkable for its regularity of feature, and of somewhat slight, yet perfectly elegant figure. The next, and with him also we shall have something to do, was Baron Tetsikoff, a member of the Russian embassy. The baron was forty-two or three years old, a ponderous man, with a countenance which, to say the least of it, was anything but prepossessing. That is to say, as much as could be seen of it, for it was greatly hidden by a tremendous black beard and whiskers, while the hair of his head, if he had lain it on the floor, might very easily have been mistaken for a black and very thick door mat. The other two gentlemen were:—The Honorable Fred Fortescue and Captain Beauchamp, of the Guards; and that is all that we need say about them.

"I assure you," the Russian baron was saying to the English lord, "it is a fact; you are melancholy beyond endurance. I saw you last night at the theatre, and even then remarked your woeful countenance. There was not the slightest animation in your looks until our renowned and beautiful actress appeared upon the stage. Is it possible that you are in love, my dear fellow? Well, if that should be the case, are you quite sure that you are the richest of us all?"

The English lord turned almost fiercely towards the Russian baron.

"What is the matter?" cried the latter. "Is it not then here, in England, as with us in Russia?"

"No, no, baron," said the Honorable Fred Fortescue, "these ladies are becoming unattainable. And, only this moment, I was saying to Beauchamp—our beautiful Lucinda has resisted the Marquis of Laidlaw's shower of gold. The ex-minister has been less fortunate than Jupiter, or our goddess more virtuous than Danæ."

Lord Lyttleton had heard nothing of that, for he had left the party to accost the actress' waiting woman, who had said to him, so as not to be heard by the rest:—

"Yes, my lord, my mistress will soon return."

"Well, but," cried Tetsikoff, responding to that which Fortescue had just said, "haven't you dungeons in which to throw these savagely virtuous women?"

The two men seated themselves and roared with laughter.

"You forget, my dear baron," said Beauchamp, "that you are in England and not in Moscow."

"See, see," suddenly cried Tetsikoff, "who is that old gentleman standing there in the doorway? And what is he looking for?"

"He may be some important personage," said Fortescue.

"Perhaps a rich old baron, smitten with the charms of our fair Lucinda," said Captain Beauchamp.

But it was simply Andrew Wentworth, who, arriving just then, had stopped on beholding the gentlemen, and whose eyes were wandering every way in search of Lucinda. And, presently perceiving the waiting woman, who, bustling in at one door, was about to bustle out at another, called to her:—

"Miss Anna, hasn't Lucinda returned yet?"

"No," shortly answered Anna, and went on her way.

Three of the four gentlemen were greatly surprised to hear the old man speak so familiarly of the great actress. And they stared at each other as he called her by her Christian name.

"Perhaps, sir," said Fortescue, rising and bowing to him, "perhaps you are the father or the uncle of our fair Melpomene?"

Andrew Wentworth, returning the gentleman's salute, answered:—

"Yes, sir, I am, almost."

Lord Lyttleton, going to, and shaking hands with him, said:—

"Good day, glad to see you, Mr. Wentworth."

"Why, gentlemen," cried Fortescue; "it is that very useful actor, Mr. Andrew Wentworth; how do, sir, how do; we did not at first recognise you."

"Ah," said the old actor; "I look different on the stage, I dare say."

"And yet," said Beauchamp, "we were at the theatre last night and applauded as loudly as the fellows in the gallery."

"Then you were satisfied," proudly exclaimed Wentworth. "Fine acting, wonderful acting, wasn't it?"

"Delicious!" returned Fortescue, smiling and winking at the others; "especially in the burlesque."

"In the burlesque?" cried the astonished actor; "whom do you mean? not Lucinda?"

"Oh, I beg pardon," said Fortescue; I see, you were speaking of——"

"Yes, of course—of my pupil—for she is my pupil. As to me, who troubles themselves about me, I should like to know? I am nobody, never was anybody, a mere utility man. And yet sometimes I am good for something. Only last night, when I had given Lucinda her cue to enter in one of the scenes, I looked off at the wing and she wasn't there, and so to fill up the time that there might not be a stage wait, I repeated, dragging it out very slowly, some of the speech I had spoken just before, and—and no doubt the people said to themselves, 'he is getting old, his memory is failing him,' at any rate they hissed me, but I didn't care for that—it wasn't the first time I had got myself hissed on her account, and presently when Lucinda came on they didn't know that she ought to have been there before, and they applauded her like fury."

"Well done, well done, Mr. Wentworth," said the captain and the honorable.

"But I shan't be able much longer to render her even that little service, for it is but too true that I am growing old, and there are plenty of younger men waiting to take my place, so I must soon leave it all."

"Well, Mr. Wentworth," said Fortescue; "miss Mordaunt will take good care of you."

"I don't want to be a burden even to her, if I can help it; and I am in hopes even yet to obtain enough to make me independent of her and everybody else. But I shouldn't be too proud to have my name on the free list of the theatre at which she was acting, that I might go and have a good cry every night."

He wept even as he said that; the very next instant he laughed and proceeded:—

"Excuse me, gentlemen, but I really can't help it—only imagine that when I am acting and ought to cry in my part, I can't do it—no, try all I may I can't—and yet when she is on the stage I find it easy enough, for I cry all the time, yes, I do, even when I ought to laugh."

And as he said that, his hearers laughed and he laughed with them.

"Oh, it's true," said Wentworth; "and it's very droll, isn't it? But you know all old people have their maniaa, and one of mine is to adore my precious Lucinda."

"Then you are related to Miss Mordaunt," said the Russian baron. "In what degree, may I ask?"

"In what degree! in fifty, sir, at least, here," said the old man, laying his hand upon his heart. "But in law I am nothing at all but a poor man who has found a treasure, and from whom any one may take it away again without even owing him the smallest reward."

"Yes," said Fortescue; "we have heard that she owes everything to you."

"Oh, already she has well acquitted herself; for instance, in a week or two I intend to have a benefit at the theatre. Well, I am going to do that because I know my dear child will play for me—I have come here now to ask her—and she will fill my house, and without her it would be empty."

We may say here that, in spite of all Lucy could say to him, Andrew Wentworth would persist in remaining in the humble lodgings that he for so many years had occupied.

"Miss Mordaunt will consent to act for your benefit, Mr. Wentworth, there is no doubt about that," said Captain Beauchamp.

"I haven't the smallest doubt in the world about it," confidently exclaimed the old actor.

Lord Lyttleton, who had been silently and earnestly listening, now said to Wentworth, his voice faltering with emotion:—

"She is greatly attached to the stage, is she not?"

"It is to her life itself," replied Andrew; "and there is nothing in the world which could induce her to leave it."

"Nothing in the world," repeated the young lord, inaudibly murmuring the words.

CHAPTER XII.

THE ACTRESS AT HOME.

It was not long before Lucy returned home, and as she came almost running into the apartment where those five men had been awaiting her arrival, three of them crying "Brava, Brava!" applauded with their hands precisely as though she had been making her appearance at the theatre. Lord Henry Lyttleton contented himself with silently gazing on her. And Andrew Wentworth muttered to himself:—

"Ah, yes, it's all very well now, but when the poor dear was singing about the streets not one of those fine gentlemen would have thrown a penny to her."

"Good morning, gentlemen!" cried Lucy; "you have been awaiting me; well, you have done wrong, for I have not even time to look at you."

"You cannot mean that!" piteously said Fortescue.

"Indeed, yes. Her Majesty, as I have just heard, honors our theatre with a visit this evening, and has commanded the 'Hunchback.'"

"Delightful, delightful!" exclaimed the captain and the honorable.

"Yes, no doubt. But as it is some time since I played Julia it is necessary that I should read over my part, and, therefore, I must turn you all out immediately."

Anna gave her mistress a packet of letters, saying that they were all pressing, and answers solicited as soon as possible.

"Ah," sighed Tetsikoff, "you really are, Miss Mordaunt, a most inhuman beauty."

"Well," retorted Lucy, with a laugh, in which the others joined, "if I am inhuman you are a barbarian, so we have nothing with which to reproach each other."

"We had, however, so many things to say to you," cried Beauchamp.

"Well, captain, make a note of them, and bring them to me between the acts. Anna, you won't neglect to prepare my dresses?"

"Certainly not, ma'am," replied the waiting maid.

Lucy had opened and commenced to read her letters, and naturally the gentlemen retired to another part of the room, that she might have an opportunity to peruse them. Except, however, the young lord, who availed himself of that moment to approach the actress, and quietly said to her:—

"You must, Miss Mordaunt, allow me to speak to you."

And, without raising her eyes from the letters she was glancing over, Lucy responded:—

"Oh, my lord, concerning you it is still more difficult than for any other," adding with a gracious smile:—"I should listen to you too long."

"Would you prefer that I should write?"

Lucy pointed to her waiting maid, who, kneeling before the fire, was tearing and giving to the flames a number of letters.

"That is how I answer," she said; "do you think it very encouraging?"

His lordship lowered his voice almost to a whisper.

"Allow me to wait in yonder apartment; I will come when you shall call me."

"And if I should forget you altogether?" smiled the actress.

"You would break my heart," murmured the young lord.

Just then, opening and glancing over another of her letters, Lucy, with an air of satisfaction, exclaimed:—

"Ah, it is from him?"

"From whom?" cried Lord Lyttleton, and in a burst of jealousy made a movement as if about to take the letter from Lucy's hand.

She turned on him a severely reproving look, and he bowed, and stammered a few words of apology. And Lucy, then relenting, said kindly and pleasantly:—

"It is from a friend, you jealous man!"

"Thanks, thanks," cried his lordship, greatly relieved; "and now," he pleaded, "be altogether good to me."

"Well, we shall see; wait, at all events."

His lordship bowed and left her side. Baron Tetsikoff, who had been watching him, immediately took his lordship's place beside the actress, and, evidently bursting with hope, and full of passion, said:—

"Divine Lucinda! have you thought of my love—have you thought of the ten thousand serfs that I can place at your feet, and that I offer to you?"

"Good heavens, baron! Of what use, think you, would be to me your love and your serfs? Keep all that for the baroness, your wife. I hear that she is charming, and you give no proof of taste in neglecting her."

Tetsikoff walked away, growling like a Russian bear. Calling her waiting woman to her:—

"Tell me, Anna," said the actress, "is there not a young woman here who has asked for me?"

"Yes, ma'am," responded Anna, "a shoemaker's wife. She is yonder."

"'Tis well," Lucy hastily cried, "send her to me."

Then she perceived Wentworth, who had seated himself in an out of the way corner of the room, waiting patiently till Lucy should be at leisure to attend him.

"Ah! is it you, my dear father! Have you been here long?"

"Yes, that I have," said the old actor, rising and hurrying towards her.

"I did not see you, you make so little noise."

"So long as you make a great deal, that is all I want."

"Well, daddy, why don't you kiss me?"

Joyfully the old man did that, and then, looking proudly at the others, said, in a way that caused them heartily to laugh:—

"There, gentlemen, you see—nobody but me—nobody but me."

"You want to speak to me, I suppose?" Lucy said to him.

"Yes, he answered, "but I will call again."

"What is it about?"

"I have a favor to ask of you."

"A favor? In that case you shall not stir a step."

"Ah, my dear child," gratefully cried the old man.

"I give you number three."

"Thank you, thank you."

"You, Lord Lyttleton, have number two."

His lordship bowed.

"And now, leave me, all of you, that I may see number one."

"Must we really go?" said Fortescue.

"Yes," responded Lucy, "I send you every one away that nobody may be jealous."

But she whispered to Lord Lyttleton, as he passed her:—

"Return."

"Thanks," he in a low tone said, and raised her hand to his lips.

"Go you into yonder room," Lucy said to Wentworth, and laughingly added:—"And while you are waiting read over my part for me."

As they were quitting the house the captain and the honorable mercilessly bantered the Russian, who responded:—

"Yes, yes, she appears cold and cruel to me now, but a Tetsikoff is not long to be resisted by any woman."

Mrs. Colston, entering the apartment and very timidly advancing, stammered in great confusion:—

"You—you told me to come, ma'am. Is it to—to—do you want some—some shoes?"

Lucy smiled, and, at the same time, wiped from her eyes a tear that had gathered in them, and then, and as though quite unable to resist the impulse, took little Mrs. Colston's head between her hands, and kissed her on the brow. The shoemaker's wife had never been more astonished in all her life, but her amazement was presently to be still greater.

"Sophy," murmured the actress.

"You know my name?"

"Yes, and you know not me, and yet you are my sister."

Sophy was almost overpowered by that abruptly communicated intelligence,

"Oh, my heaven," she said, "you my sister Lucy? And you blurt that out at once, without giving me any warning. Oh, you don't know how you have made my heart turn completely over. Can it be that you are indeed my sister?"

"Yes, indeed, and will you not embrace me?"

"Oh, yes, yes," replied Sophy, but it was very hesitatingly that she did so, and seeming quite unable to comprehend how the grand actress could be her sister.

We know that those two had been separated when mere children, and Sophy had been so young that soon would she have forgotten entirely that she had ever had a sister, but for being constantly reminded of the fact by the villagers amongst whom she had been reared. On that morning, after the narrow escape of which we have heard Mrs. Colston speak, Lucy, questioning her as to whether she were hurt, was immediately struck by the dialect in which her answer was given. Further questioning as to where she had been born and how long she had been in London, caused Sophy to give the name of the village she had inhabited—and which name Lucy then remembered and recognised—and to pour forth so much of her history as served to prove to the actress that the sister she had for so many years been longing once again to behold was at last and very wonderfully discovered. A very little further conversation between them now, and Sophy's last lingering doubt was dispelled. Rapidly, and as briefly as was possible, Lucy related what had been her life since the day when she had been torn from her home, and from the bed side of her dying father, by Silas Sloper. And then Sophy recounted her own short history. Of her hunger, and of all else which had occurred on that fatal day within the cottage, Sophy remembered nothing, not a shadow of a memory remained of all that, and it was now to her all the same as though she had never till that moment beheld the sister just made known to her. Sophy had not after her father's death been taken to the union; the squire of the village, "a fine old English gentleman," undertook to provide for, and to rear the poor little orphan girl. She grew up in the good squire's family, and when sufficiently old became one of the domestic servants of his household. That worthy man had died some years before the time which we have now reached, but Sophy had until her marriage, about a year before, continued in the service of the squire's son and heir. Sophy had come to London with the family, she and Peter Colston had met—and that is all we need to say just now concerning the past. While still earnestly conversing those two were interrupted by the waiting woman. Lucy, angrily, and endeavoring to conceal her emotion, said:—

"Why have you come here? I have not rung for you."

"It's your jeweler, ma'am," said Anna; "he has been here before—he has given me your diamonds, ma'am, that you had sent to him to be fresh mounted."

"Very well," impatiently cried the actress, "place the casket anywhere, and go away—and come not again till I send for you."

"Ah!" thought Miss Anna Fubbs, "wait till I have a waiting woman of my own, and see how I'll bully her and order her about."

"Diamonds," said Mrs. Colston, "I have never seen any except at a great distance—we don't have many people with diamonds come into our shop, I can tell you."

Lucy rose, and, going to a table, brought from it a small casket, which she handed to Sophy, saying:—

"Look there, my dear little sister, look!"

And Mrs. Colston, opening the casket, was perfectly dazzled.

"Oh, how lovely," she exclaimed, "and what a deal of money they must have cost."

"No," Lucy smilingly responded, "they have cost me nothing."

Mrs. Colston hastily closed the lid of the casket.

"Nothing! Ah! I said quite right then—that is a great deal too much."

Lucy was greatly hurt, and for several seconds continued silent. But, at last, she said:—

"Give me that casket, Sophy," and took it from her sister's hand and opened it.

Bringing from it, one by one, an emerald bracelet, ear rings, and a tiara of diamonds, all that the casket contained, she named the persons by whom they had been presented to her, and each jewel had been the gift of some lady of distinction. And finding that was so, Sophy very sincerely begged her sister's pardon, and was greatly ashamed that she had had so bad a thought of her. Presently, Mrs. Colston saw on another table a second casket, to which she called her sister's attention. Lucy was surprised, and gave it as her opinion that it had been left with her waiting woman by a mistake of the jeweler's. But that was not so; Anna Fubbs had placed it there, having been bribed to do so by the Russian baron. And knowing that he was throwing away his sighs and his jewels, Miss Anna sighed too, as she thought how much better the baron would have employed those diamonds if he had given them to herself.

"Well," said Sophy to her sister, "you ought to see to whom they belong."

Lucy assented, and, opening the casket, took from it a small note, and read:—

"To the woman that I love, TETSIKOFF."

"Tetsikoff!" cried the astonished Sophy; "what sort of cough is that?"

"Ah, very good," thought Lucy; "he sends me the produce of his ten thousand peasants."

Then she said aloud:—

"I told you, Sophy, that casket was not for me, and I am about to send it to its true destination."

She seated herself and hastily wrote a few lines.

"What are you doing?" asked her sister.

"Wait a minute—Call."

"Call who?"

"Ring!"

"Oh, yes."

And Sophy tugged very violently at the bell rope. To the footman, who very quickly came, Lucy gave the casket and the little note that she had written, saying:

"John, carry these yourself to the Baroness Tetsikoff; you know where she resides. And be particularly careful that you do not say from whom you come."

The man gone, Sophy enjoyed a good laugh.

"Now, I see," she said; "the Baroness What's-her-cough is about to be very agreeably surprised."

"Now, let us talk of you, Sophy. Are you happy? Your husband loves you, I hope, and is good to you?"

"Oh, yes; I have nothing to complain of on that score."

"You are then quite satisfied with your lot?"

"Well, I am not very ambitious. Peter works hard and we manage to live and pay our way and that is all we need."

"No, no, that is not all! You must have a fine large establishment, in a fashionable neighborhood; and if you like——"

"Like what?"

"Why, I am quite rich now, and——"

"Oh, thank you, you are very good," interrupted Sophy, with some confusion, "but we have no need of anything; want for nothing, thank you."

"You refuse," said Lucy. "Your husband will be more reasonable, and you must take me to him, and——"

Sophy was more than ever embarrassed.

"My husband!" she cried. "Wait, I was going to tell you—he is very busy, and—and rather rough in his manner, and—and sets himself against—he might believe in things that—that I don't believe—but he is so obstinate that when he gets an idea into his head——"

"I understand," Lucy bitterly said. "Mr. Colston has prejudices; is not that it?"

"Well, you see, he thinks that actresses are——"

"Yes, I know, abominably wicked creatures, all of them."

Lucy said that with a shout of laughter, and afterwards wiped away a tear.

"You are going to be angry with me?" hastily cried Mrs. Colston.

"With you; no, my child," responded Lucy, recovering her composure. "Besides, your husband is right, perhaps—being an actress, I might compromise you."

Then, kissing her sister, she continued:—

"Let us say no more about it; come to me in secret, if it must be so, but come you must, and come you will, won't you now? I could not live now without seeing you."

"Yes, yes, for I couldn't stop away myself," burst out the little woman. "Every time that I come this way on any errand——"

"Precisely," Lucy said with effort; "you will find some pretext——"

"Dear Lucy," said her sister, tenderly and consolingly.

"No, never mind; it is over now! I have detained you a very long time, and do not wish to get you scolded by your husband. Kiss me and run away; good bye, Sophy dear, good bye."

"No, Lucy, I won't say good bye, for I shall see you again soon, and I shall come often; don't you be afraid!"

Left alone, Lucy agitatedly paced that splendid apartment, and, full of a sorrowful anger, thus ran her thoughts:—

"Be a great actress, the idol of the public; be more, be an honest woman, and the first wealthy puppy that approaches will treat you as though you were a poor lost wretch, and a poor workman, a petty shopkeeper, will refuse to acknowledge you as his sister. Oh, the world, the world! When we struggle, first against misery, then against the intoxication of wealth and luxury, and finally—against our own heart—it believes not in the sincerity of the contest; it condemns us in advance when we combat, and despises us even after we have conquered."

Thus far had her reflections carried her, when the principal door of the apartment was thrown open, and she beheld Lord Henry Lyttleton. And, glancing towards him, Lucy said to herself:—

"Oh! his contempt would kill me!"

GOLD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

We have no extensive fund of wealth. No, nothing of that sort; no servants, carriages or gilded luxury surround us, but we do have a home, a home of comfort, a home of love, and united care together makes us happy, my wife and I; Toi, I call her. No toddling little ones around us, but somehow the neighbors' children do get in to see us, and when night comes, and brain is exhausted with constant thinking all the live long day, "there is an eye that marks our coming, and looks brighter when we come," and a cheery voice comes to my ear, "Somebody loves you." Better than gold this; better, far better than lace and tapestry, than the insignificance of gilded society's hollowness and heartlessness; the exhilariveness of luxury, when we are alone with those we love; united for life, sworn to protect and defend, sworn to be honored and obeyed; one purse, one home, one ambition to do duty, to do good; no money or sympathy for the rich in our house, but comfort for the poor, the deserving, and sometimes for the vicious, whom temptation has overcome. One life to live, one heaven to hope for, one eternity in which to love forever and forever. No time to cheat or defraud; straight forward work; clean table cloths, lots of vegetables fresh, music, united voices and hearts; "Wahneta," "Maggie May," "Swallows on the Home Base;" Sundays, "Old Lenox," "Coronation," plenty of others; Saturday night, all the newspapers, not forgetting the one for the old lady. Yes, the old lady; painstaking and taking pains; not allowed to be sick around her; consideration and care, knowledge of human ills and ailments, always doing good to somebody. And then the dog—one of the family; his rations served regularly; no dresses or shirts stolen off from our premises—dog objects, can't see it, experienced dog, just twelve years old, white and intelligent, looks you in the eye. Well, here is Jason with a pail of blackberries; I must stop looking forward for the glorious return of another Saturday night.

ALF. ROBINSON.

SNOW BLINDNESS.—"I was with a party of hunters in the Rocky Mountains, about 8,500 feet above the level of the sea, and had strayed off from my companions just as the sun, which had been hidden up to that time, came out with a dazzling flood of light, which, on that boundless realm of snow, was really blinding. I attempted to proceed, but the glittering snow seemed to burn my eyeballs, and, in straining my vision for a foothold, to prevent sliding upon the rocks below. I was almost totally blind in fifteen minutes. I looked at the sun and it was as red as blood, and all the peaks and canons around seemed one vast plain of fire. Suffering so acute I had never felt before. In a few moments I was totally blind. I thought my eyes were running out and that I should never see the light of that sun or the faces of my friends any more. All my hopes and ambitions, all my plans were dashed to a moment, and all the terrors of a blind man's life came up before my imagination. I sat upon the snow for a long time, unconscious of cold, trying my eyes by keeping them shut for a while and opening suddenly. But it was of no use while the sun shone. All was dark as midnight. Shortly after the sun went down my eyesight was partly restored and I made out to find my companions."

NEW YORK CLIPPER.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1870.

To Correspondents.

DELUTH.—"A bet has been referred to you for decision. We are the boats." Which boat left Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior in connection with the Erie road, late in the season as the first of July. The past season being an early one, one of the friends of the town offered to bet $50 that a steamboat would reach Duluth in place by or before the 25th of May. Such was the wording. On the 24th May the steamer came up the lake within about two miles of Duluth, and was there stopped by the ice, and kept there for a number of days, until a large steamer came up and beat a passage through to the dock. But here comes the tug of war. A number of the passengers ——— tried it on the ice from the steamer to Duluth on the 26th, and some claim that inasmuch as the passengers arrived, they virtually won the bet for the steamer. The bet is a heavy one, and the parties agree to abide by your decision. I believe it is the custom in sea-port towns to consider a vessel arrived when she is in the harbor. In river towns, bets on the arrival of steamers are decided by one end of the gang-plank being placed on the shore. Duluth has no shore to land to, and no harbor, but simply a small dock built out into the lake. Now for your decision." ——We cannot perceive why there should be any dispute about this wager. One party bets that "a steamboat would reach Duluth on or before the 26th of May;" that the boat landed to reach Duluth is evident from the fact that she remained about two miles from that place for several days after the 25th, and only reached there when the ice formed a bad opened a passage for her. The fact of certain another steamer had opened a passage for her. The fact of certain another steamer had opened a passage for her. The fact of certain of the steamboat's passengers reaching Duluth on the 26th has nothing to do with the bet, which specified that a boat should reach there, nothing being said about passengers, and the party who bet that a boat would arrive at Duluth within the time specified loses the wager.

MANNING, Chelsea.—When a base runner reaches first base at the same time the ball does he is not out, as the ball must be held on the base before the striker reaches it in order to put the latter out. The base before the striker reaches it in order to put the latter out. The umpire can call three balls in succession if three unfair balls are so pitched, as also three strikes if three balls are pitched over the base and within fair reach of the striker and he refuses to strike at them. The striker can hit at any ball he chooses, even if it comes on the bound to him, and the umpire has no right to call a ball until the ball passes the home base. If the striker hits a ball from the bat which comes to him on the ground or bounding, he can be put out on such a hit just as in the case of any other kind of ball he may hit. A "foul strike" is made only when he steps forward or backward to hit a ball and does not stand across the home base line when he strikes at the ball.

REGATTA, Philadelphia, Pa.—1. Clubs being trumps, and the ace of hearts led, the party holding the king of hearts need not play it, but might play any other card he chose, having no trumps, no matter what suit is turned up, as all that the rule calls for is to follow suit or trump. In this case the ace of hearts did not belong to the suit of hearts, but to the suit of clubs. 2. There's no rule to govern your second question, but we are of opinion that he who held the ace was entitled to take or "rob" the King, as the ace always has first turn at robbing. Had it been Queen, Jack or any other card the ace would have preference; then why not over the King?

CAPTAIN HAYMARKERS, St. Joseph, Mo.—The umpire is not compelled to call balls except the ball pitched he such an one as the rule expressly defines as "unfair." All other balls he is to judge of as to whether they are in reach or not. A fair ball can be pitched as low as a foot from the ground, and as high as the shoulder, and yet to one batsman the former ball would be out of reach, and to another the latter would be, and of this difference the umpire is allowed to be the judge. The striker cannot call for any kind of ball unless it be within fair reach of his bat and over the home base. From your statement it would appear that there was an unfair effort made to bully the umpire.

F. C. GILMORE, Fortress Monroe.—The word "take," in the rule you refer to, means simply that the base runner is legally bound to take the base he is entitled to. No rule prevents bases being made or lost on any called balls, provided the player chooses to risk being put out. Suppose a batsman be on first base and another on third, and two balls having been called, a ball is pitched over the catcher's head. This entitles the striker to his first on called balls, and the player at 1st to his 2d, but not the player at 3d to his home base; but if the latter chooses he can run in on the over-pitched ball which gave the striker his first on 3 balls, the run in being, of course, made at the risk of being put out.

BROCK, Baltimore, Md.—1. Mr. W. M. Fleming's company for the season of 1869 and '61, which opened at Augusta, Ga., Sept. 29th, 1860, was as follows:—The Misses Annie Eberle, Julia James, Mary E. Salisbury, Anna C. Gardner, Kate Selden, Jane Porter, Kate Sims, Mrs. Harry W. Young, Messrs. J. E. Pulley, W. W. Hill, Thomas Moore, Richard Cooke, J. R. Hall, Colin Stuart, Henry Lewis, G. S. Parkes, Porter, E. W. Langrish, James H. Wright and W. M. Fleming; leader of orchestra, William Hetterich; machinist, Charles A. Brown. 2. You do not fix the time sufficiently definite for us to answer.

ENOCH TIDE, Philadelphia.—1. There is no reason for calling a vessel "she," other than the custom and habit which has authorized the feminine appellation from "time immemorial." 2. Address a note to Mr. R. F. Lopez, owner of schooner yacht Madgie (not Magic), Stonington, Conn. 3. Sappho, a title given to Clemence Isanke, a celebrated and beautiful Grecian poetess, born in 1664, on account of a beautiful ode to spring which she composed. 4. A player who does not play for any money consideration, but merely for exercise and pleasure, and who does not hold any position or place solely from his merits and skill as a base ball player.

S. T. W., Quincy, Ill.—James Buckley, the Bishop and Swaine were with the Buckley Serenaders in 1867. In 1868 G. Swaine was the only one of the family connected with that organization. 2. It was the Empire Minstrels and not Brooklyn that were with the troupe as clog dancers during the season of 1867-8. Their names were Johnny and Willie Budd. 3. Hatfield threw a ball 136 yards, at Cincinnati, in 1868. 4. G. Swaine Buckley and James Buckley are the only ones of the troupe now living, but the latter does not appear in public.

ST. STEPHENS, Norwich, N. Y.—1. Lady Thorn and Goldsmith Maid have each trotted three heats in the same aggregate time; the former's being three in straight heats, 2:19¾; 2:19¾ and 2:19¾; and the Lady's the first, second and fourth heats, 2:19¾; 2:18¾, and 2:21; George Palmer winning the third heat in 2:19¾. 2. Lightfoot, having won a heat, beats Comet.

CHAMPION, West Troy.—In fourth street.—Rule 2d of the sailing regulations of the New York Yacht Club, says:—"The measurement of area for the purpose of time allowance shall be the product of the multiplication of the extreme length, on or under the water line from fore side of stem to aft side of stern post, by the extreme breadth, wherever found, both measures to be in feet and decimals." Time is therefore allowed for area of tonnage.

GEO. A. SPITZER, Princeton, Ind.—The captain of your club is not right. No fly or running in bases can be made on a base on called balls by right of the rule, unless he is forced to vacate the base he occupies by the striker taking his base on called balls. But the former can make his next base on the called ball—whether first, second or third—if he likes to run the risk of being put out. The rule is correct as set forth in the book and your captain is wrong.

LEE CLUB, Georgia.—If the A nine have had their eighth innings and the B nine are at the bat, and have the lead in the score, the time the game is called even, though not a hand has been put out, they win the game. But if the A nine lead the score under such circumstances, then the game has to be decided by the score of the last nine innings played, which, in the case you mention, would be the seventh innings.

J. SIMONSON, Tremont, Nebraska.—The challenging club in base ball have the right to name place and date of match. Of course it is optional with the challenging club to accept. Should they accept then they name the place and date of the return match. A challenge in base ball is an invitation to a club to visit the challenging club.

HARRY HAPGOOD.—1. The schooner yacht Silvie (then a sloop) did go to England about a year after the America won the cup; was beaten in a regatta there, and afterwards challenged any yacht in British waters to sail against her, but not being able to get on a match returned to New York. 2. You neglected to give date of race, consequently your item is omitted.

W. E. H., Dubuque, Dubuque County, Iowa.—There is no theatre in the United States that will hold 6,000 persons. 2. The Stadi Theatre, New York; Front Street Theatre, Baltimore, Md.; Boston Theatre, Boston; Grand Opera House, New York; Academy of Music, Philadelphia, are among the largest theatres in the United States. 3. We have no record of the seating capacity of churches.

T. M. L., Marshall, Ill.—Your decision was erroneous, as you will see by consulting the rules. The base log is the base, and not the post it is or ought to be fastened to. So long as a player touches the bag he cannot be put out, even if it be ten feet from the base post.

DISSECTED.—1. A cedar boat is more durable than one made of paper. 2. No record for 3 miles; 2 miles, 12:34½; by Parker and Carpenter, Boston, 1861. 3. Cannot inform you. 4. Send to Ed. Jones for Prof. Wood's work called "Physical Exercises." His address will be found in another column. 5. No.

N. H., Minersville, Pa.—Yes, in a match between Ethan Allen, with running mate, and Dexter, trotted at the Fashion Course, L. I., June 21, 1865, the former won in 2:18; 2:18; and 2:19; Dexter was timed in the first heat at 2:16, and in the second at 2:16¾, but as he did not win either the time does not go upon record.

KENTUCK, Covington, Ky.—1. We have no intelligence of the agents whereabouts. 2. Stock actors are expected to furnish their own wardrobe. 3. We do not know him personally. 4. To follow implicitly the instructions of the principal agent is the main duty of an assistant agent.

ST. ORVILLE, Fort Philadelphia.—1. Both are first class. 2 and 3. See our city summary. 4. The legal rate of back hire, under one mile, for one passenger and trunk, is fifty cents; over one mile and not exceeding two miles, seventy-five cents. 5. We have no distinct bargain with the hackman; that is the best way to avoid trouble.

CLIPPER, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ward turned the upper stakeboat thirteen seconds ahead of Allen, who came home an easy winner in the race. His competitors were Andy Fay, Tom, Dan and John Hancon. The prize was $100 and a champion silver belt, and they came home in the order named.

S. S., Fort Leavenworth.—1. He is not required to do so, but should do it for his own information in judging fair balls. 2. Yes; provided, in the case of a strike, that the first ball is a fair one and the last one being provided, in the case of a called ball, that the first ball is unfair.

SECOND NINE, Cincinnati.—The rules require that the umpire should sign his name in the scorg books of the contesting clubs, declaring which was the winner. If he refuses to do so before, or to do so they violate the rules of the game and thereby forfeit the match by a score of 9 to 0.

JERRY, Carlinville, Ill.—All right should you "go over the Rhine."

M. A. D., Washington, D. C.—We regret to learn of your intentions, but your own interests come first. Many thanks for attentions.

SUBSCRIBER, Richmond, Va.—Having permitted one player to correct his play, the others have a right to do the same, as their play depended on the card played by the first party, and they must not be made to suffer through his error.

SUBSCRIBER, Boston.—1. The umpire has named the time or withdrawn the bet. The terms were too loosely made, consequently there could be no lose or win until the bet, a very foolish one, was decided.

D. GORDON, Cambridge.—They held it from 1858 to 1862. Then from 1864 to 1867. The Eckfords held it two years, the Unions one-half season and the Mutuals half a season. No other club has held it.

S. C. J., Philadelphia, Pa.—1. The City of Paris made the trip from Queenstown to New York in 7 days 23 hours and 4 minutes, apparent time. 2 Charley Gallagher did defeat Tom Allen, but it was by an unfair ending after McCluey. Ed.

DISSOLVING VIEWS, Bloomington, Ill.—An exhibition of dissolving views, economically managed and route carefully selected, embracing towns where it would be a novelty, ought to yield a handsome profit.

I. M. C., Philadelphia.—We have been unable to gather any information from our records; by calling at the box office of the theatre or addressing a note to the manager you will probably learn what you desire on the subject.

EUCHRE PLAYER, Philadelphia.—A could not throw up his hand; he should refer the matter back to his partner and abide by the remaining trick. If A's partner could not take the trick, then the adversaries score two points for the euchre.

C. E., Bernardsville, Laramie City, Wyoming Territory.—1. You can procure the outfit of costumes for the Grecian Statues for about twenty-five dollars. Silk tights, &c., will cost a deal more. 2. There is no book published.

Fay or Tom Public, Harrisburg.—August 30th, 31st and Sept. 1st, we presume, are the correct dates, as she went from there to Williamsport, opening September 2d. If it is very important apply to the janitor of Brant's Hall for the dates.

NAW FERRY.—Tom White is credited with having rowed from Putney to Mortlake, Eng., 4¼ miles, in 23:13. Bob Chambers pulled over the same course, according to Bell's Life, in 23:15, which is the fastest championship time. We cannot give you the date of the race.

D. S., Dixon, Ill.—Carleton published Miss Cora Mowatt Ritchie's works. You can order any of them through any bookseller in your town. 2. We would not advise you to come to New York for a situation. Try Chicago or Louisville.

RAILROADIST, Greencastle.—1. Not being a professional lady, we cannot answer. 2. Dora Shaw has retired from the stage. 3. Sallie Chinetop is married. 4. Will answer next week. 5. There are no photographs of the Stetson family.

TIME ALLOWANCE, New York.—1. See answer to Champion. 2. The Cambria was the eighth yacht to pass the home stake, numerically, but the ninth by official time allowance, which renders her, in all wagers, number ten.

BASE BALL, Minn.—A day will suffice. He can play the same day, provided he has ceased to be a member of any other club, and not played as such in a match game for sixty days prior to the game he plays in.

EISENBAUR, Frederick, Md.—The first ball pitched cannot be called a ball, nor can a strike be called on the first ball unless the batsman strikes at it. But if he does hit it it counts as one of the two balls required to constitute the repetition referred to in the rules.

A BASE BALLER, Pittsburgh.—The Atlantics are champions. The first game played with the Athletics was null and void, on account of being played in the rain. The second was disputed as being a practice match, as both games were, in fact.

C. P., Camden, N. J.—The Deering family were murdered by Antoine Probst on the 11th of April, 1846, and Probst was hung on the 9th of June following.

BUSHWOOD.—High deals; Jack is high and the seven spot low; the custom of the game, however, should be taken into consideration when disputed points arise.

FOLEY, Boston, Mass.—1. Mrs. Julia B. Barrow is residing with her husband in or near this city. 2. Miss Fanny Morant will star during the coming season.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—1. It is not essential, but still preferable, that ballad singers for minstrel troupes should read music. 2. Apply to some minstrel manager.

DAUPHIN, Baltimore, Md.—1. It would depend entirely upon his quickness of perception. 2. There is no practical teacher, which answers your 4th and 5th.

SAM BAKER, New Orleans, La.—We have not heard anything def inite relative the matter, but will write and find out what disposition has been made of them.

CHAS. P. C.—The race between the Cambria and the Dauntless was an international contest, as they were respectively the representatives of England and America.

J. L., Chicago.—Gladiateur's time was stated to be 1:39 by the English sporting papers, but such time is not official. We decline to decide your bet.

BARNEY, Fossil Creek, Kansas.—1. Each having two to go out at pitch all fours, B wins with his low, Jack, as the point for game is always taken last. 2. He's a sport.

TRUEBY, Chicago.—The batsman can hit at the ball any way he likes, provided he stands across the line of the home base when he strikes at the ball.

J. D. C. F., Bolfast, Me.—We believe Peck & Snyder can supply you with the articles you desire. See their advertisement in this issue.

F. V. E. & Co., Elmira, N. Y.—1. Answer next week. 2. Yes. 3. Bona solotaire are seldom, if ever, engaged solely for that specialty.

CUBA.—1. George Wilkes' best time is 2:22. 2. Best wagon time, 2:24, by Dexter and Lady Thorn. 3. Boston Music Hall will seat about 2,500.

PAT FARR, Jersey City.—1. It has never been satisfactorily settled who is the champion big gunner in this country, there having several claimants to that position. 2. $50.

J. GAYLORD, Philadelphia.—We have made a brief notice of the matter, but cannot give publicity to the letter. The subject is of no general interest.

CHARLIE BOY, Fredericksburg, Va.—1. They are an assistance, but to what extent can only be known by trial. 2. You will have to get them inside.

U. S. A., Washington, D. C.—To lead to capture the Fort at all times is the better policy, although in some cases, in covers sometimes, however, that it is better to hold trumps to secure a game.

HON. MASON, Cincinnati, O.—Miss Susan B. Anthony's speech on the McFarland verdict was delivered to ladies only at Apollo Hall, in this city. It will be impossible to obtain a copy of it.

J. H., Johnson.—Dexter's best recorded time is 2:17¼, but he has trotted in 2:16½, although it does not go on the record, for he did not win the heat.

UNCAS.—The Sappho is an American yacht, and was built in 1867 at the yard of the Messrs. Pollon Brothers, foot of Bridge street, Brooklyn.

J. SCHREIBER, New York.—The Cambria's position in the late race for the America Cup is tenth yacht, vide official report of the Regatta Committee in another column.

B. J. B., Syracuse.—Correspondents desirous of learning particulars of scores and other statistical matter, had better write to the clubs direct. The Re's have the best variga.

HARRY, Chicago.—We should say not unless both agree, as circumstances might change the positions of the contestants by the postponement.

BASE BALL, Cincinnati.—The Forest City club, of Cleveland, being the subject of your conversation when the bet was made, the result of the match with that club decides the bet.

YOUNG SPORT.—The Camden and Dauntless left Daunt's Rock, on the coast of Ireland, July 4th, and the Sappho set sail from Queenstown on the 6th.

N. McF., Newport, Ky.—1. No. 2 No. 3. Harry Gribbin weighed 144 lbs. The fight between he and Coburn lasted 30 minutes, during which time 21 rounds were fought.

J. H. F., Boston.—Outside bets are off in case of one of the horses paying forfeit.

J. S., Matteawan.—Sixteen miles by rail from Newark to Paterson.

E. J., Pithole.—There is not now, nor was there ever, anything of the kind in New York.

H., Toledo, O.—Your item too old to "ware;" besides you don't give precise date, which is necessary.

CLIPPER, Albany.—There is no official time taken in England in racing.

J. H. B., Hamburgh, O.—Old Put, we believe, is here, in the East; he has no string halt.

A CONSTANT READER.—The umpire's decision settles the question. Scorers should always call by scores each innings.

HERALD, Wheeling.—1. They had played but one up to Aug. 9th. 2. They did not.

J. R. B.—John Crosher has retired from the profession, and we believe is keeping a hotel in some western town.

GOING TO TRAVEL, Boston, Mass.—Parties having reasonable baggage are not charged extra. The base log is the base, and not the post it is or ought to be fastened to. So long as a player touches the bag he cannot be put out, even if it be ten feet from the base post.

I., June 21, 1865, the former won in 2:18; 2:18; and 2:19; Dexter was timed in the first heat at 2:16, and in the second at 2:16¾, but as he did not win either the time does not go upon record.

KENTUCK, Covington, Ky.—1. We have no intelligence of the agents whereabouts. 2. Stock actors are expected to furnish their own wardrobe. 3. We do not know him personally. 4. To follow implicitly the instructions of the principal agent is the main duty of an assistant agent.

The legal rate of back hire, under one mile, for one passenger and trunk, is fifty cents; over one mile and not exceeding two miles, seventy-five cents. 5. We have no distinct bargain with the hackman; that is the best way to avoid trouble.

CLIPPER, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ward turned the upper stakeboat thirteen seconds ahead of Allen, who came home an easy winner in the race. His competitors were Andy Fay, Tom, Dan and John Hancon. The prize was $100 and a champion silver belt, and they came home in the order named.

S. S., Fort Leavenworth.—1. He is not required to do so, but should do it for his own information in judging fair balls. 2. Yes; provided, in the case of a strike, that the first ball is a fair one and the last one being provided, in the case of a called ball, that the first ball is unfair.

SECOND NINE, Cincinnati.—The rules require that the umpire should sign his name in the scorg books of the contesting clubs, declaring which was the winner. If he refuses to do so before, or to do so they violate the rules of the game and thereby forfeit the match by a score of 9 to 0.

JERRY, Carlinville, Ill.—All right should you "go over the Rhine."

M. A. D., Washington, D. C.—We regret to learn of your intentions, but your own interests come first. Many thanks for attentions.

SUBSCRIBER, Richmond, Va.—Having permitted one player to correct his play, the others have a right to do the same, as their play depended on the card played by the first party, and they must not be made to suffer through his error.

SUBSCRIBER, Boston.—1. The umpire has named the time or withdrawn the bet. The terms were too loosely made, consequently there could be no lose or win until the bet, a very foolish one, was decided.

D. GORDON, Cambridge.—They held it from 1858 to 1862. Then from 1864 to 1867. The Eckfords held it two years, the Unions one-half season and the Mutuals half a season. No other club has held it.

S. C. J., Philadelphia, Pa.—1. The City of Paris made the trip from Queenstown to New York in 7 days 23 hours and 4 minutes, apparent time. 2 Charley Gallagher did defeat Tom Allen, but it was by an unfair ending after McCluey. Ed.

DISSOLVING VIEWS, Bloomington, Ill.—An exhibition of dissolving views, economically managed and route carefully selected, embracing towns where it would be a novelty, ought to yield a handsome profit.

I. M. C., Philadelphia.—We have been unable to gather any information from our records; by calling at the box office of the theatre or addressing a note to the manager you will probably learn what you desire on the subject.

EUCHRE PLAYER, Philadelphia.—A could not throw up his hand; he should refer the matter back to his partner and abide by the remaining trick. If A's partner could not take the trick, then the adversaries score two points for the euchre.

FAY or TOM PUBLIC, Harrisburg.—August 30th, 31st and Sept. 1st, we presume, are the correct dates, as she went from there to Williamsport, opening September 2d. If it is very important apply to the janitor of Brant's Hall for the dates.

NAW FERRY.—Tom White is credited with having rowed from Putney to Mortlake, Eng., 4¼ miles, in 23:13. Bob Chambers pulled over the same course, according to Bell's Life, in 23:15, which is the fastest championship time. We cannot give you the date of the race.

TIME ALLOWANCE, New York.—1. See answer to Champion. 2. The Cambria was the eighth yacht to pass the home stake, numerically, but the ninth by official time allowance, which renders her, in all wagers, number ten.

BASE BALL, Minn.—A day will suffice. He can play the same day, provided he has ceased to be a member of any other club, and not played as such in a match game for sixty days prior to the game he plays in.

EISENBAUR, Frederick, Md.—The first ball pitched cannot be called a ball, nor can a strike be called on the first ball unless the batsman strikes at it. But if he does hit it it counts as one of the two balls required to constitute the repetition referred to in the rules.

A BASE BALLER, Pittsburgh.—The Atlantics are champions. The first game played with the Athletics was null and void, on account of being played in the rain. The second was disputed as being a practice match, as both games were, in fact.

C. P., Camden, N. J.—The Deering family were murdered by Antoine Probst on the 11th of April, 1846, and Probst was hung on the 9th of June following.

BUSHWOOD.—High deals; Jack is high and the seven spot low; the custom of the game, however, should be taken into consideration when disputed points arise.

CHAS. P. C.—The race between the Cambria and the Dauntless was an international contest, as they were respectively the representatives of England and America.

J. L., Chicago.—Gladiateur's time was stated to be 1:39 by the English sporting papers, but such time is not official. We decline to decide your bet.

BARNEY, Fossil Creek, Kansas.—1. Each having two to go out at pitch all fours, B wins with his low, Jack, as the point for game is always taken last. 2. He's a sport.

TRUEBY, Chicago.—The batsman can hit at the ball any way he likes, provided he stands across the line of the home base when he strikes at the ball.

J. D. C. F., Bolfast, Me.—We believe Peck & Snyder can supply you with the articles you desire. See their advertisement in this issue.

F. V. E. & Co., Elmira, N. Y.—1. Answer next week. 2. Yes. 3. Bona solotaire are seldom, if ever, engaged solely for that specialty.

It is very easy to charge thus and so on gentlemen who happen to know which club is to win—very easy, we say; but this knowledge, it should be remembered, costs a great deal of time, experience and—money. Base ball is very uncertain—you are up to-day and down to-morrow; if one club should win all the time, all interest would be lost in that club, and the gate money would be very light; hence it is not the best policy to be always at the head of the heap. Go to, you dissatisfied grumblers; let the ball players have their own way and all will come out right in the end, probably.

FRAUDULENT TURF TRANSACTIONS.—Some of the "respectable dailies" have been complaining of questionable operations on the turf, and cite a number of cases where the "strings were pulled" by judges and starters, so that the horse "arranged on the slate" to win, should do so. It is to be regretted that the feelings of our "respectable" friends should be so shocked by these scandals of the turf, and we would spare them further pain were the remedy within our power; but these little "does" have been a feature of the sport from the time "when the memory of man runneth not back," and will continue world without end, we presume. And here the question arises—what has become of the National Turf Association? Was not that body organized for the express purpose of purging the Turf of even the suspicion of dishonesty? Are the members of that association performing their duty? Are they "around," watching the moves of the racing and trotting ring? If the association should fail to take proper action on these alleged frauds, better for the concern had it never been born.

MUCH COMPLAINT has of late been made about the mistake of the doctors and druggists. A story is going the rounds to the effect that a certain physician, who had been tending a child six months old, ordered it a pint of beer every day. This must surely be-er roneous. Any doctor giving such an infant malt liquor should be prosecuted for malt-reatment.

THE WHITE CADETS of West Point have been creating an unpleasant stir about the introduction of a negro student into their ranks. It is claimed that they have no just grounds for their barbarism, but "Our Jim" quietly suggests that they certainly have "Caffee grounds."

LOST OR MISSING.—Louis, Prince Imperial of France; was last seen at Saarbruck, where he received his "baptism of fire." Any information of his whereabouts will be thankfully received by his afflicted parents. Apply at this office.

A DEMOCRATIC FRIEND of ours, who has had the luck to be present on several occasions when the President has made one of his short speeches, says that there were not many particulars in the General's remarks.

CURIOUS.—Up in the coal regions of Pennsylvania the major portion of the adult population are miners.

BOSTON is probably called the Hub because its principal fellows are spokesmen.

A GOOD DEAL.—Four aces and a king.

A COUNTRY SPORT.—Mill races.

ing deserved applause.....This time the Harvards had to submit to a whitewashing, as Rogers, for the third time in succession, captured Bush. Clyne caught out Willard and Packer fielded out Goodwin. The tally now stood as 7 to 3, and the Stars took the bat for the last time to get two runs to escape defeat.

J. Cummings led off in the ninth innings with a ball to Reynolds, who threw it so low to Barnes that Arthur had a life given him and who got to his bat. Reynolds then struck three times at the ball and also got to his bat. Barnes then struck three times at the ball and then ran for his 1st base, but Bush sent the ball there before him and Reynolds came back. Cummings—or rather Jewell, who was running for him—getting home, one out and one run in. Worth now came in to the rescue, and instead of popping up a high ball Reynolds got to take it easily, now depended upon Packer, but he hit a ball direct to Reynolds, and the latter, taking it easy, threw another low ball to Barnes, who could do no more than stop it, and Packer got a life given him. One more chance was left, but Rhody popped up a high fowl which Reynolds captured and it was all UP with the Harvards. At the close of the contest musical cheers were given by the two clubs and the Harvards rode off with flying colors, grander of the victory than of any of their tour: The score:—

First base by errors—Star, 5; Harvard, 5. Umpire—Mr. Hatfield, of the Mutuals. Time of game—1 hour and 55 minutes.

The feature of the Star fielding was Roger's splendid play at left field. Jewell also did excellent service behind, considering his inexperience, players having been used to by the top catches. Paster bore off the palm for base play. On the Harvard side Bush again took the lead, Barnes also playing finely in his position. In batting Dyas took a decided lead on the Star side, and White and Wells on the Harvard side. The umpiring was very good. The return game will be looked for in Boston with great eagerness. In the game with the Forest City nine on Saturday the Stars will play their new catcher.

HAYMAKERS vs. RED STOCKINGS.

A WATERLOO FOR THE UNIONS.

The Haymakers played the Reds in Cincinnati on the 9th, and were treated to nearly as bad a defeat as the Washington Olympics had been the previous Saturday, though the game opened out handsomely for them. An assembly of 2,500 to 3,000 were assembled, and the Reds, having lost the toss, and David Schwartz, of the New Orleans Lone Stars, having been chosen umpire, game commenced about three o'clock.

The first innings resulted in a Chicago for the Reds, Waterman alone making his base on a ball which dropped in short left field. Geo. Wright and Gould were next in succession by Foran in right field, and Allison struck wildly at McMullen's wild left-handers. The Unions made two, neither earned. Dick, the first striker, was handsomely captured on the foul fly by Leonard. York took 1st on called ball. Fisher [illegible] safely for one base. Flowers sent a sharp grounder to Sweasy, who fielded it well, [illegible] second in time to end Fisher's career, but in throwing to first for the double play threw too high, both York and Flowers scoring. King, who came next, carried his ball far out to right for third base, where, however, he was left, Leonard attending to Bellan's fly, the innings closing with the Haymakers in the lead by two.

The next innings did not alter affairs any, a couple of whitewashes being the result of unsafe batting, Dick making the only clean hit. Hi. Wright flew out to York, and Brainard and Sweasy each let Flowers have nice little flys. Leonard also gave Flowers a chance for a fly, but the latter stumbled and dropped, Andy being left on second, Wright gobbled in Foran's fly, and in consequence. H. [illegible]; McMullen was called to first, and Dick hit well to left for one bag, but York's pounder to George Wright enabled the player to cut off McMullen at third.

In the third innings the Reds seemed to collar McMullen's pitching, making five with but one hand out. Fisher was now brought in to pitch, but the change proved for the worse, the Reds peppering him for seven more runs before the innings closed, while the Haymakers were retired for two, the score now standing 12 to 4 in favor of Cincinnati.

From this out the Reds steadily increased their lead, punishing Fisher for 13 in the sixth innings; this brought McMullen's left hand into play for the balance of the game, six runs being made off him in three innings, the game finally closing with the one-sided score of 34 to 8. In the sixth innings George Wright slipped and fell, injuring his game leg, so that he will probably not be able to play for two weks or more. Leonard then came in to short, McVey going to left and Dean to right. The umpiring was very strict, quite a model in this respect. The score was as follows:—

FOREST CITY vs. ATLANTIC.

The Forest City Club, of Cleveland, O., arrived in town on Sunday, inst, on Monday, August 15th they visited the Capitoline grounds, L. I., and played their first game this season with the Atlantics, in the presence of about 2,000 spectators. Considerable interest being manifested in the game, the Forest City boys came on the ground at 3 P. M., and were much admired for their manly appearance, their fine uniform showing well on the field. The weather was warm but not hot.

The game opened at 3.25 P. M. with the Atlantics at the bat. By two errors they received two runs, Kimball and Ward failing to handle the balls sent them by Pearce and Start, the same players putting two opponents out afterwards. On the Forest City side good batting sent in two men, although an error by Pearce gave one player a life.

In the second innings the Atlantics were handsomely whitewashed, Heubel making a splendid catch and Sutton a beautiful pick up at third. This compliment was duly returned, although the excellent batting of the Forest Citys merited better results, but Kimball was captured at home base in style, and Ferguson made a fine foul bound catch.

In the third innings the Atlantics added two to their score, Start getting one by a fair base hit, Allison nearly catching the ball, Chapman getting his by errors, Sutton and Pratt making beautiful stops.....On the other side, though two men batted well for their base, a fine double play by Pike and Start led to their retirement for a blank score, the Atlantics now leading by a score of 4 to 2.

In the fourth innings the Atlantics again scored a single by an error, Sutton, after making a splendid stop, throwing the ball over Carlton's head, fine plays by White and Kimball marring the fielding. On the Forest City side Pike and Pearce put the side out, Heubel scoring a run after getting a two base hit.

The 5th innings gave the Atlantics three runs, but one of which was earned, Sutton dropping a fly ball and throwing home badly. On the other side the Forest Citys earned a single by two good hits. Carlton making his 2d by his bit. This left the touts at 5 to 4 in favor of the Atlantics, the game having been thus far closely and finely contested.

In the sixth innings the Atlantics were put out in fine style for a single, White making a catch which "brought down the house." Sutton also made good catches. The Forest Citys, for their share, scored two, White making a four base hit.

In the 7th innings Kimball's bad fielding led to the Atlantics scoring 3 runs, Ward and Carleton putting the side out, the latter making a fine catch of a foul ball. Pratt led off with a good hit for his 2d, but he was put out on returning to 2d on a foul ball, and then the next two retired at 1st base, the 7th innings closing with totals at 12 to 6 in favor of the Atlantics.

The 8th innings saw the Atlantics whitewashed for the second time, White making a double play on a foul fly catch.....On the other side they scored two runs, chiefly by good batting, Ferguson and Chapman making fine catches.

The Atlantics now went to the bat for the last time, and after giving chances for a whitewash, ran up a score of 3 runs, Hall, Pearce and Start earning bases. This left the Forest Citys 8 to get to win, with but slight chance of success. They made a good effort, three men getting bases on hits, but by the splendid play of Ferguson and Start ended the innings for one run, the game ending with the totals at 15 to 9 in favor of the Atlantics.

LACROSSE.

NEW YORK vs. BROOKLYN.

After the base ball match on Aug. 6th on the Union grounds, Brooklyn, the Knickerbocker Lacrosse Club made up sides, New York vs. Brooklyn, best three out of five. No time was lost in placing the men, as follows:—

New York.	Position.	Brooklyn.	Position.
W. Wheeler	Goal keeper	R. W. Hopkins	Goal keeper
McIntyre	Point	Ritchie	Point
Frye	Cover point	McCloud	Cover point
T. Hopkins	Fielder	Foster	Fielder
Whitaker	Fielder	Cowan	Fielder
Brindley	Facer	Taylor	Facer
Flynt	Fielder	Whitaker	Fielder
Calder	Home	Graham	Home
Mitchell	Home	Wheeler	Home
McIndoe	Home	Attrill	Home
Umpire	Mr. Cowan	Umpire	Mr. Tweddell
	Referee—Mr. Cooper

1st game—Won by New York in 24 minutes.
2d game—Won by Brooklyn in 18 minutes.
3d game—Won by Brooklyn in 29 minutes.
4th game—Won by Brooklyn in 9 minutes.

Brindley and Taylor faced, in which the advantage was gained by the latter, and the ball sent spinning in the direction of the New York goal. It was, however, speedily hurled back, and now the game commenced in right good earnest. The play on both sides was excellent, the agility of the players being noteworthy. Brindley made that piece of rubber dance about on his stick to the admiration of all, having full control of it. He is a pretty and easy player and runs fast. Hopkins at goal is quick and sure, though hardly up to his usual game. He stopped some fine throws. Taylor was everywhere—he is another good player, seldom losing the ball, being very spry and accurate in throwing. Mitchell is something of the same stamp as the latter, perhaps a little more gentle in play. Calder played a very strong forward game. Wheeler and Graham were up to their usual mark. McIndoe is a pretty player. McIntyre exerted himself to the utmost; he can throw the ball a good distance. Ritchie, at point, checked like a demon. Frye played poorly, being excited and muffing the ball, indulging a little too often in swiping. Flynt is a neat player and does not relish being knocked over. Foster, as usual, on his feet and played well. Cowan was indefatigable. McCloud, Wheeler, Attrill and Whittaker did well. Too much praise cannot be given for the gentlemanly play shown on both sides. New York won first game, Brooklyn the next three in succession, the victories being credited to Messrs. Mitchell, McIndoe, Wheeler, Graham and Cowan.

At the end of the first game the new flag, the design of the president, presented by a prominent citizen of Brooklyn, was formally presented by Mr. Cooper. The president, in receiving it, responded in a few well chosen remarks, when it was immediately hauled up and sent to the breeze by the son of the giver. Three cheers were then given for the gentlemen—three more for base ball players, and a last three for the Knickerbocker Lacrosse Club. The uniform adopted by this club is very neat and looks very nice, showing the figure off to advantage. As this club intend to start for Montreal on the 18th to play some international matches, we hope they will do as well as they did on Saturday, and may success attend their efforts.

LACROSSE MATCH.

The game of lacrosse, played on Saturday, 6th inst., upon the occasion of the benefit for the widow of the late lamented Wm. Piccott, at the Union grounds, Brooklyn, E. D., proved quite a feature in the programme. Immediately after the base ball match was ended, the goal flags were planted in the ground, and the players took up their position in the following order:—

New York.	Position.	Brooklyn.	Position.
Hopkins	Goal keeper	W. Wheeler	Goal keeper
G. Wheeler	Point	Graham	Point
Brindley	Cover point	Ritchie	Cover point
T. Hopkins	Fielder	Conway	Fielder
McIntyre	Fielder	Mitchell	Fielder
Taylor	Facer	Cowan	Facer
Frye	Fielder	McCloud	Fielder
Attrill	Fielder	McIndoe	Fielder
Calder	Home	Whittaker	Home
Foster	Home	Flynt	Home

The game was quickly started by the ball being faced by Messrs. Taylor and Cowan, Mr. Thompson acting as field captain. The ball was immediately sent by a neat throw towards the Brooklyn goal, but a nice stop sent it back to the other end of the field, and thus the game kept wavering, from one side to the other, till at last a straight throw sent it through Brooklyn's goal, New York winning the first game. At this point Mr. Cooper formally presented the new club flag, on behalf of the donor (a prominent citizen of Brooklyn). The president, on behalf of the club, received it in a few well chosen remarks, when it was hoisted by the son of the giver. Three hearty cheers rent the air for the donor of the flag, three more for base ball players, and then, in return, for the Knickerbocker Lacrosse Club. Play was then resumed, the next four games being sharply contested and well enjoyed by the crowd, who kept encroaching on the ground in their excitement over the game, to the inconvenience of the players. The summary is as follows:—

Game.	Won by.	Min.	Game.	Won by.	Min.

THE NEWS IN ENGLAND.

A cable telegram dated London, August 10th, speaks as follows regarding the feeling created there by the intelligence of the result of the race:—

"It was first reported here that the Cambria had won the race for the Queen's Cup in New York harbor, and there was much exultation over the victory. Her real position in the race was not known until this morning. The deception practiced on the public is bitterly denounced. The London News growls over the fact that England and again been beaten, and says, plaintively:—'So the Queen's Cup stays beyond the ocean, where it has been twenty years.'"

MR. ASHBURY'S LETTER.

In relation to the race for the Queen's Cup, on the 8th inst., of which the CLIPPER has been complimented as giving the better report, issued early next morning, Mr. Ashbury afterwards issued a letter, which is decidedly creditable to the gentleman, particularly in reference to the test of yachts' qualities on any one particular course. By it, it will be seen that he proposes to issue a challenge, which will no doubt be taken up. We here quote the material portions of his letter:—

In the first place I desire, through your medium, to express to Commodore Stebbins and the committee generally, my best thanks for the able and impartial manner in which they organized and arranged the race for so splendid a fleet, and at the same time to confess my surprise at the marked manner in which the steamers and cruisers kept clear of the competing yachts; till that race, I doubted their intension to do so, but with the best feeling for "fair play," so engrafted in Americans as a body, I could scarcely hope that the course would be so entirely free, bearing in mind the incredible number of craft conveying an excited and interested public naturally anxious to secure the best view.

I had the honor yesterday to officially represent the Royal Thames Yacht Club, and I much regret that there were no other English yacht owners engaged in the race, to witness the most remarkable display in the annals of yachting, and one in my opinion to describe [illegible] portray. As you can well understand, I am deeply sensible of the [illegible] demonstrations, receptions and hospitality afforded to me as an [illegible]ish yacht owner. The honored compliments so bestowed will, I am sure, be accepted in England as an evidence of American appreciation of Englishmen and Englishmen in general, and the recollections of which no time can efface from a grateful memory.

It is not my intention or desire to say anything controversially, or which can in any degree detract from the great success of the Magic, Dauntless and other yachts; still I cannot admit that the New York Yacht Club course is one of the best suited to test the capabilities of any vessel, in which opinion I believe I have a race across the Atlantic will settle which is the fastest and most weatherly vessel. Thanks to the great courtesy of the committee, the Cambria had the choice of positions; but, n

THE SECOND GREAT FIGHT

BETWEEN

TOM KING AND JEM MACE,

FOR THE

CHAMPION BELT OF ENGLAND AND £400.

FOUGHT NOVEMBER 26, 1862.

King Wins in 21 Rounds, 38 Minutes.

We this week present, as promised, the sequel to the report, published in a recent issue, of the first championship battle between Tom King and Jem Mace, and have given the victor in that former, but compelled to lower his colors in this instance, at a time when victory appeared about to perch upon them. To use an old and not very elegant expression, the defeat at the hands of Mace stuck in King's craw, and after the lapse of some time he opened negotiations for a second match, which was speedily effected. The excitement concerning the meeting was most intense among all classes, and though eighteen carriages composed the train which had been chartered for the occasion, they were crowded with passengers, including many of the upper crust, at two sovereigns per head. The start was made from Fenchurch street station, a few minutes before 7 o'clock A. M., on the 26th of November, 1862, and, after proceeding to a point near the Thames Haven Station, orders were given to alight. This order was obeyed, and a rush made to an adjoining field to find a fit spot for the ring. The ground, however, proved very marshy and wet, which rendered another move for about a quarter of a mile nearer the river necessary. A good and level piece of turf was soon picked out, and, after a slight delay, the ropes and stakes arrived. While the ring was being pitched Mace and King both adjourned to some cottages which were handy, and, having warmed themselves, proceeded with their toilets. A long line of people during this time were arriving from the train, and soon a large muster was gathered round the ring, and to such an extent it was not until Johnny Gideon united his energies and influence with the authority of the ring constables that an outer ring could be formed. It was now discovered that the arrangements made by the manager of the affair, Mr. Coney, were such as almost to command success. He had, at great expense, engaged a couple of steamboats with roving commissions, so that, in case of magisterial interference in Essex, a move could with ease be made to the opposite coast of Kent. When a fair spot had been made Fred. Oliver and his assistant sprites, Old Puggy and Martin, soon commenced the ring. There was an immense number of the P. R. fraternity present, amongst them John C. Heenan, Harry Brunton, J. Macdonald, Harry Orme, Bob Brettle, Young Broome, Bob Travers, Jerry Noon, Mike Madden, Mike Cocklin, Bos Tyler, Young Baldock, Young Ben Caunt, Dan Collins, Charley Lynch, Harry Broome, Tom Tyler, Harry Hartley, Jemmy Shaw, Young Shaw, Jack Grant, Jack Brown, Geo. Crockett, Dooney Harris, Fred. Dickinson, Bill Ellis, Young Dutch Sam, Joe Goss, looking wonderfully well after his fight and victory over Posh Price, and, later in the day, Tom Sayers, who did not arrive in time to witness the whole of the first battle, in consequence of not being able to get into the station at Fenchurch street. The ring was soon pitched and a perfect inner-ring was quickly formed by Billy Duncan, inspector of the P. R. A., and his assistants, viz., J. Shaw, Tom Paddock, Mike Madden, Dan Collins, C. Lynch, Fred. Dickinson, Geo. Crockett, Jack Keele, Jack Hartley, James Clarke, of Liverpool, and Patsy Daley, who were combined with the half-dozen picked by Mr. Coney, viz., Alec Keene, Geo. Browne, Jemmy Welsh, Geo. Sims, Jack Brookes and Geo. Henley. A brisk sale of inner-ring tickets took place at 5s. each, and a large quantity of straw was placed for the accommodation of the Corinthians, who mustered in very great force indeed. There could not have been less than 500 persons around the ring. As the referee had been appointed by the stakeholder, there was now nothing to wait for, and, all being prepared and ready for the men, there were offers to lay 100 to 70 on Mace, which met with no response. Jem Mace was the first to throw in his cap, which he did very modestly, at five minutes to nine, having Bob Brettle and Bob Travers for his seconds. 6 to 4 was now currently offered on Mace, but only taken in a few instances. King threw in his cap at two minutes to nine, having Jack Macdonald and Bos Tyler for his seconds. The rain still fell, cold and drizzling. The toss for corners was won by Mace, who chose the one with the wind and rain at his back. The colors were next tied to the stakes—those of Mace being a silk handkerchief, with his own likeness in the centre, a mauve border, with the likenesses of Brettle, Travers, Hurst and King in medallion. King had a cream-colored silk handkerchief, with a variegated lilac border and scroll. Mace offered to back himself at level money, but King refused. When the men stripped, the referee having taken up his position, the men shook hands and stood up at eleven minutes past nine for

THE FIGHT.

Round 1. The moment so fraught with interest and excitement to the partisans of the belligerents had now arrived; the busy and careful work of the seconds was at last completed to their entire satisfaction, and the men were delivered at the scratch. While their toilets were being arranged, the "making ring" had been eagerly watched by all with almost breathless silence. As Jem turned to face his opponent he gave a momentary glance at the sky, whose dull, cheerless aspect was anything but calculated to enliven the countenance. Both advanced to the scratch in that firm, confident step which denotes the action of well drilled practitioners. The moment they had met the right mawley was extended with manly frankness, and now there came that gripping of the hand which is no pleasant one to witness. The customary libation completed, the seconds retired to their respective corners, so that the belligerents were left to themselves. Perhaps the first thing that riveted the attention of the spectators, as the men stood front to front, was the striking difference in height which existed between them. It had been confidently stated that Mace had never been in better condition, and certainly, as he stood thus confronting his antagonist, there was nothing in his appearance that even the most fastidious could find the slightest fault with, and in all things he looked a far superior man to what he did at their former meeting. In weight, Jem, when he last poised the beam, pulled down 13lbs.; and with inward confidence beaming in his eye he took he stated it was impossible for a man to feel better; and this assurance there can be no doubt had great weight with his admirers, many of whom, from over-caution, had waited for this opinion from Mace himself before they had ventured to "put it on." The moment the men had been "set" by their seconds, there was perceptible that twitch and shrug of the shoulders which denote a disapproval of the morning air. Jem having put up the prop in proper order, drew from range, and of this position it may well be said the skill of the master was at a glance displayed, for he was well covered at all points. Tom also stood remarkably well, and although by some good judges he is stated to have been a little too fine about the loins, and by no means deep enough in the jaw and neck, yet he looked a most formidable opponent. Mace, as he manœuvred, looked at his man with a sharp, penetrating glance, as though he was mentally summing up "the King's affair." The result seemed most satisfactory, for Jem gave one of his well known jerks of his nob, as much as to say, "Tom, I intend to give you another dressing." King smiled at his man, as if to intimate if he really imagined he was capable of dressing him again, he would oblige by being quick about it, as there needed something in the shape of a settlement to warm up the system. After a little sparring Mace drew from range and dropped his mawleys, and then with his right rubbed the metal and arms. King imitated this action, as he felt numbed about the arms, and thought it necessary to do the burnishing to promote the circulation. Jem, with a cautious step, drew into range, and then, by way of a feeler, slightly let go the left; but Tom, who was decidedly slicker on his pins than in any of his preceding battles, got well away with the back step, thus showing that these efforts of his opponent to draw out his guard were not likely to be successful. As Mace broke for the purpose of getting from distance, King dashed at him in a most inpetuous manner, and missed administering a fine right handed shot from the fore-arm. Mace, as Tom came on for the purpose of forcing the fighting, retreated; but when just opposite the referee and umpire the men closed, when Jem, finding he was likely to get in an awkward position, ducked his head and went down, King looking at him. Both men were loudly cheered, and as there was just a shade of commotion among those who formed the uprights of the outer circle, Professor Duncan, attended by the "faculty," promptly administered a mild dose of his efficacious remedy for disorder, the "syrup of whips," and the cure was instantaneous.

2. A moment's pause, and then there came booming across the ring the magical call of "Time," and, with the eagerness of men to whom nothing is more welcome than that summons, they sprang almost simultaneously from the knees of their seconds, and with a firm step came to the scratch. The first plunge is the great thing in all matters, and the combatants having taken their preliminary "shader," by getting over the opening bout, now were feeling themselves "all there." After they had toed the mark Jem drew back, and after again just rubbing his hands folded his arms on his breast. Tom also dropped his mawleys, and thus both, being completely from range, stood eyeing each other like two game cocks. Mace, thinking that active measures would be immeasurably more advantageous than delay, now led the left, but did not get it home, if King got well from range. Tom now came the shine at his man in an impetuous manner, and delivered the left on the top part of the pimple, and put in another from the fore-arm on the kisser, which had the effect of producing a slight show of the crimson, to that, as on the former occasion, Tom won the first of the leading points, as first blood was claimed by his seconds and admitted. Jem, after getting home slightly from the half-arm with the left and right on the dial, closed with his man, when, finding he was likely to get into an awkward position, he slipped from his antagonist and got down. There was, as the combatants were on the instant covered by their seconds, a deal of excitement round the ring, which was put an end to by the ring keepers.

3. Jem was the first to rise from his corner, but no sooner did the busy seconds of King see that his antagonist was on the move, than they gave the office, and, with that impetuosity of action so characteristic of him, he at once advanced to the scratch. After shifting, changing position, and taking fresh ground, King went dashing at his man for the purpose of forcing the fighting, and, getting partly over Jem's right cross guard, planted the left on the right cheek, and, with a wild, slinging, round hit from the right, slap on home on the side of the knowledge box. Mace, in the counter-hitting, administered one with his stinging left on the jaw, when, as Tom was not to be kept out, they closed. In the struggle for the fall King got his right arm round his man, and they went down near the referee, in a curious, awkward fall, Mace, who had his head bent down, hitting the top part of it against the ground. It was imagined by many at the moment that Jem might have received some severe punishment, but they were soon convinced to the contrary; for, when the men had become disentangled, and Jem, with his usual agility, had righted, he looked up with a broad grin, as much as to say, "Don't be uneasy, I'm all right."

4. While the combatants were in their corners every movement of their seconds was watched with the utmost minuteness, and it was a treat to observe in what fine order they sent them up to the mark. Tom was the first to present his towering height at the scratch, but was almost in an instant met by his opponent. Bos Tyler pointed at Mace in a good humored manner, as much as to intimate that Jem had had some of the burnishing powder. Mace feinted with the left, but, finding he could not get in with artistic effect, he did not let it go freely from the shoulder. Tom, for the purpose of taking better range, followed up, and with the left got home on the right cheek, and also put in one from the right. As Mace broke to get away Tom hit out with both mawleys, but did no execution, as Mace threw the left off well with the right guard. After slight sparring and manœuvring Tom led the left, but it was not sent sufficiently well in to be effective, nor did he meet with any better success in following up with a wild hit from the right, for Jem drew well out of range. On again coming to distance King worked his right arm back wards and forwards, as though he intended to let it go, but did not. As Jem shifted Tom followed, when Mace got home a fine left-handed hit on the jaw. The combatants, in the most spirited manner, fought across the ring, Mace administering some of the cayenne with both mawleys. In the close both struggled for the fall, when Tom got from his map and went to grass in his own corner.

5. Mace was the first to come from his corner, but he had not long to wait before Tom faced him. Both men were considerably pinked and their physiognomies now possessed more touches of beauty than are to be found in the photographs of them in Geo. Newbold's collection of celebrities. Jem, as he came from his corner, bent his head forward, as though he was mentally debating in what new manner he should try to get well at his man, who, by the rapid style in which he had been fighting, had given proof that he was a dangerous antagonist. King, the instant he had put up his hands, went dashing at his man for the purpose of forcing the fighting. With the left he administered a stinger on the left cheek, and followed up with a half-round hit from the right cheek and followed up with a half-round hit from the right. Mace, as his opponent rushed at him to close, drew out, but Tom, not to be denied, followed up, when, in a rally, Jem pegged away with both mawleys, left and right, with astonishing rapidity, doing a great deal of heavy execution. In the close they struggled for the fall, when Mace threw his man in clever style near the ropes. (The friends of Mace were in ecstacies and long odds were offered on their pet.)

6. Tom, in the first two or three rounds, had unquestionably had a shade the best of it, from the style in which he had gone dashing at his man, and the quickness he had displayed. Mace did not exhibit that steadiness in his practice that he afterwards did. Now, however, that Jem had got the true measure of his man, there was a total change in his tactics, and the manner in which he now fought proved he was in all respects greatly superior to the "big 'un" in science. Both, on presenting themselves at the mark, bore evidence of having been by no means idle, for Jem was swelled about the ivories in a very conspicuous manner, while King, from the appearance of his left peeper, gave unmistakable proof of having been warmed up, he was likewise bleeding from the nose. Still there had been no serious damage done on the part of either. After some little manœuvring, the combatants changing and shifting position, King dashed at his antagonist in his usual style, getting home left and right on the head. Mace met his man as he came with the rush on the milling suit, and, in one of the finest rallies that could be witnessed, the combatants fought right across the ring, and there was something delightful to the admirers of boxing in Jem's style of fighting his man with both hands, left and right, at the nob. These blows were delivered with a rapidity that was quite electrifying, being sent ding-dong, straight home, so that Jem was all over his man in an instant, the blows making an impression as though Tom had been stamped with a couple of dies. Tom was by no means idle, but also pegged away at his man with the left on the head and the right on the body in merry fashion. In the close, they got on the ropes, when Jem for the moment touched the top one with his right hand, but Tom driving at him he fled his position, the men struggled for the fall, when Tom, as a termination to this well fought round, was under.

7. As the battle progressed so did it increase in interest, for there was a marked specialty about the manner in which it was being fought that could not possibly fail to enhance its importance among the Corinthians. There can be no disputing both men had been, from the commencement, fighting remarkably well, and the battle, as will be seen, had already presented two striking and prominent features, for though, until Jem had thoroughly got the measure of his man, King had in the opening bout been considered to have a slight lead, yet the style in which Mace was now performing was sufficient to convince all that there had not been the slightest mistake made in his merits as regards milling excellence. The combatants came simultaneously from their corners. Tom, as he stood at the scratch, opened his mouth and rubbed his hands, and then, on again pushing himself into position, drew out and retreated to his own corner, Mace following. Both, as they again drew to range, steadied themselves, and in a fine counter with the left got well home, if not doing a considerable execution, on the top part of the cranium. Mace, on breaking, got to the ropes, when, as Tom came boring in to a close, he slipped from the embrace of the young giant and went down.

8. From the manner in which the tinis had been rubbed in, it was apparent the colors had been well worked up, though this was much more conspicuous on Tom's dial than his opponent's, for King's left peeper had a small lump on the side of it, while the nose and mouth looked a good deal puffed. Mace, as the battle progressed, lunged out the left, but did no execution, as he was not well to distance. Mace, after King had opened with this wild hit, took up a fresh position, and in doing so, as he was followed by his antagonist, he hit the back part of his head against the ropes. Tom pressed in Jem pulled himself together, and, after some fine left-handed counter hitting, in which Mace delivered very heavily on the middle of the head, they closed and went down, Mace through the ropes. The battle had now lasted 38 minutes, and it had been nothing but downright hard fighting and no mistake.

9. King made another dash at Jem, "on hostile thoughts intent," and got home apparently a hot 'un on the right squinter, but there was no sign of injury, external at least, to the vision organ, and Jem instantly returned a severe propper on the dial with the left and then countered a second effort on the part of King, who essayed his right. Tom, desperate, now dashed in with determination, and bored his man through the ropes, to the delight of the ring. Jem, however, declined to take 6 to 4, freely offered by the backers of Mace.

10. Mace, the instant the signal was given, came forth with the utmost alacrity to renew the struggle. King, as an opening to the attack, lunged out the left and administered a telling spank on Jem's right jaw; and then, as Tom came dashing on, the men fought in a fine two handed rally right across the ring, when King got his man's nob for an instant to the right, and pegged away in the most telling beautifully. Jem, like a good tactician, extricated himself; and, after some severe milling, in which Mace got in the most telling manner on his man's mouth, cheek and nose—going, in fact, all over the dial with his regulators in a rapid and surprising manner—the men closed at the ropes, right opposite to the umpire and referee, when Jem got his man in position and gave him a fair back heel fall.

11. When the combatants came from their corners the effect of Jem's hitting in the last bout was plainly to be noticed, for his left eye was still further improved and he also bore some additional marks on his physiognomy. Tom again was the first to commence the attack, and, in leading, got home the left on the right cheek and followed it with one from the right on the left pimple, after which, who timed his man beautifully, administered another tremendous left hander on the mazzard, when Tom's nob, from its effect, went waving back. On the instant, however, the game fellow pulled himself together and dashed at his man to renew the struggle, when they met him and delivered a tremendous left hander on the nose, which produced a rather copious supply of the ruby. As Mace took fresh ground, Tom, with his usual style of bending his head slightly forward, went dashing at him, and, after a regular dust-shaking, give and take fashion to a close, when Tom, while receiving Jem's severe props on the dial, made use of the right once or twice in a very efficient manner on the body, when Mace got from his man and went down. The referee now got into the ring and crossed to Tom's corner, for the purpose of calling the attention of the seconds of Tom to a slight mistake that had been made while Jem was down; but there is not the slightest necessity to particularize, as there was no harm done, and the gallant Tom was only spoken to by the way of a friendly warning.

12. Tom dashed out the left, when Jem, after stopping the intended visitation with the right, followed his antagonist up as he retreated. The latter, in a splendid rally, got home the left and right, Mace again in his telling manner doing with both mawleys tremendous execution. The men, who had fought right across the ring, closed in Mace's corner, when Jem got down, Tom falling on him. During this round the referee had several times to caution the seconds, who, in a most reprehensible manner, followed their principals so closely as frequently to be in the way.

13. The men again went to work in a spirited and determined manner, Jem, with the left, got well home on the front of his man's dial, when Tom, with the right, administered some of his lamb's wool on the ribs. As Jem broke to get from his man, King followed, when Mace went to grass.

14. No sooner had the men advanced from their corners than Mace, getting well to measure, delivered a fine left hander full on the nose, and this stinger had the effect of causing Tom's head to twist as though it had been severely shaken. As Jem shifted position, Tom, not to be denied, came dashing at him to force the fighting, when, after some merry exchanges, they closed and in the fall went down together in the centre of the ring. Tom, on being taken to his corner, had his left eye marked as though it had been japanned, and the referee, noticing this rather unusual appearance, went into King's corner to make a more accurate observation. He then crossed to Mace's side of the ring to make further examination, and warned the seconds that he would not allow any unfair advantage to be taken; and as there were some very suspicious looks about Jem's mawleys, he insisted on their being washed. Tom's umpire, Mr. Richardson, also went to his man's corner, when he complained that he thought there was something put on his eye. It appears Jem's seconds had most improperly mixed some lampblack with resin, and placed it in their sponge. This was, at this moment a good deal of excitement round the ring, but the indefatigables soon made things all right.

15. This was a merry but a short round, in which Mace had all the best of it, his hits being given with far more precision than Tom's. In the end, King rushed his man down, and fell on him.

16. Tom at once dashed at his man in a vicious manner, when, after a fine exchange of compliments, in which each did execution, they closed, and in the fall Jem, who had all the best of the fighting, was under.

18. Such a certainty was the battle looked upon for Jem, and such liberties did he take with his man at the punishing two-handed infighting, that Johnny Gideon was almost impelling some one to come and ease his conscience by taking his offer of £30 to £20, but there was not one of Tom's friends who thought it good enough to suit him. Indeed, Tom's umpire, one of the best judges of milling that ever went to scratch, felt that he was the favorite, and good luck, Mace could not lose. After some more severe fighting, in which Mace again delivered in the most telling manner on Tom's dial with both mawleys, Tom made a slip in getting from his man, and went down on his knees. On the referee now getting to the centre from his perpendicular, and as Jem noticed this he beckoned him to renew the round. King was willing, but Jem, with that coolness which, knowing that Tom was decidedly distressed, and needed nursing, at once closed in and covered his man, so that no advantage could in a little mutual "forensic" badinage between the opposing counsel.

19. "£30 to £25," again shrieked the Rothschild of the Ring, but none of King's partisans responded, so that he had again to put the money back, and a lucky thing too for him, as a momentous change was impending. On the men coming up there could be no doubt that Jem, feeling within himself that he was the victor, and that victory within his grasp, was less cautious than usual, and, thinking that Tom needed but the coup de grace, and fearing that delay might bring the police in the moment of victory, went weaving in to get well to distance, and, as he took his position, he left his head the hollow of the ring. Jem, who had repeatedly tried to land a clipping cross counter with his right, had just opened himself for the purpose of trying it on, when Tom, with one of the most tremendous hits ever seen, caught his opponent a regular clinker on the cheek with his right, a blow that seemed to go all over Jem's face with its crushing effect. Jem, who was bleeding from the mouth and nose, reeled and staggered from the effect of this visitation, and then, to the consternation of his friends, fell in the middle of the ring, all of a heap.

20. There was great commotion and excitement in all parts of the ring, and the seconds of Mace were working with a zeal and energy that at once told how completely critical was the position. Jem was the first at the scratch, and was all anxiety for the appearance of his opponent, and looked most intently at the referee. When, however, that functionary had twice repeated his summons, Mace, who had by no means recovered from the effects of the last knock he had received, came staggering from his corner. Tom at once dashed at him, and caught him a hot 'un on the proboscis. Jem, in getting away from him, went down all of a heap near the referee's seat.

21 and last. Tom was again at the scratch as the call for his man, and no sooner had Mace come up than King went to him, and, with a slight push on the head, sent him down. Jem, who was weak and exhausted, and who had the right side of his face swelled in the most extraordinary manner from the effects of King's right hand, now was now quite hors du combat, and his friends, seeing he had not the remotest chance of winning, threw up the sponge in token of defeat, and King was therefore hailed the winner and champion of England, the battle having lasted exactly 38 minutes.

The above description of the battle is taken from Bell's Life, which contained the following

REMARKS.

King certainly fought better and more confidently than on the former occasion, and, were he only a little steadier, would prove a very dangerous customer to any man breathing. He is fresh, young, strong, and a very hard hitter, but the anxiety he displays throughout to be doing something, is so great that it frequently leads him into mischief, which a little more consideration and forethought might easily avoid. Mace, on the very day of the battle, forwarded to us £20 to make a fresh match, to come off as soon as King chooses, but within six months. If King means to make this match of course he will receive the belt, but if he declines the belt will have to be restored to Mace on the usual conditions. Of Mace little is required to be said. No one who saw the mill will doubt that he lost it by a fluke. He had the game almost entirely in his own hands until the 19th round, and had not been so over confident we believe must have won. It will be a lesson to him in future not to hold too cheap an opponent who, however deficient in science, may still have a dangerous hit in him, which, even by accident, or something akin to it, as in this case, may confound the experienced tactician, and bring him to grief. The way he fought throughout gratified every one, and the gameness with which he struggled against nature after the severe hit in the 19th round was the theme of universal admiration. The loss of the battle has been very serious to him, as he not only found a good deal of his own battle money, but had got out 500 colors. Mace is, and always has been, a civil, well conducted man in private life, and is still full confidence that, should he is dissatisfied with the result of the fight may be gathered from the fact that he has called on us to state that, if King will not make a fresh match for a stake, his backers are willing to give King a present of £20 to fight Jem in a fortnight, off-hand, so that the public may judge whether that battle was a mistake or no.

USE OF POETRY.—We once heard a gentleman say, "Shakspeare was certainly a great writer, but what is the use of his writings? Would he not have done more good to his fellow-creatures by putting one loaf of bread into their hands?" but here is a good reply to the gentleman: "Poetry warms the heart, and fills the head with useful and agreeable maxims and beautiful images, sublimes the affections, and thereby enlarges our enjoyment and worth. Moral excellence, in a great measure, depends on exquisite sentiments: a person may have both a lively sensibility and an improved taste, and yet be a bad character, from giving himself up to the dominion of his passions; nevertheless, without this enlived temper of soul, no man ever became excellent."

PERSONAL SECURITY.—"Will you do me a favor?" says young Brooks to his wealthy friend, Simon Hanson. "What is it, George?" says Hanson. "I wish you to lend me a hundred dollars, sir." "Call at my counting house," rejoined Hanson. George was not long in paying his respects. "What security can you give me, young gentleman?" "My personal security, sir." "Very well, get in here," says Hanson, lifting up the lid of a large iron chest. "Get in here!" exclaimed George, in astonishment; "what for?"—"Why, this is where I always keep my personal securities

FAIR MEANS FOR THE FAIR.—"Ma, I'm going to make a soft soap for the fair, this fall," said a beautiful miss of seventeen, to her mother the other day. "What put that queer notion into your head, Sally?" "Why, ma, the president is just what I have been wanting." "Pray, what's that?" "A New Jersey farmer, and I hope he will be a good looking one."

DRAMATIC COMPOSITIONS.

Action of the Senate on the Bill for the Encouragement of Authors and Proprietors.

In the Senate of the United States, on March 24th, 1870, Mr. Trumbull asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in the following bill, which was read twice, referred to the committee on the library, and ordered to be printed.

A BILL FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT AND PROTECTION OF DRAMATIC COMPOSITIONS, DESIGNED AND SUITABLE FOR PUBLIC REPRESENTATION, BY SECURING TO AUTHORS AND PROPRIETORS OF THE SAME CERTAIN RIGHTS DURING THE TIME HEREIN MENTIONED:—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That from and after the passage of this act the author and authors, or legal proprietor or proprietors of any form of dramatic composition, designed and suitable for public performance or representation only, and not for publication, and not heretofore published, performed or represented, being a citizen of the United States, his or their executors, administrators or assigns, shall have the sole right of acting, performing or representing, or causing to be acted, performed or represented on any stage or in any public place, for the term of ten years from and after recording the title page in the clerk's office as hereinafter directed.

2. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the first section of this act unless he shall, before any public performance or representation of such dramatic composition, deposit a printed copy of the title of the same in the clerk's office of the district court of the United States of the district wherein the author or proprietor shall reside; and the clerk of such court is hereby directed and required to record the same forthwith, in a book to be kept for that purpose, in the words following (giving a copy of the title, under the seal of the court, to said author or proprietor, whenever he shall require the same):—

"District of ..... to wit: Be it remembered, that on the ..... day of ..... anno Domini ..... of the said district, hath deposited in this office the title of a dramatic composition, the title of which is in the words following, to wit: (here insert the title) the right whereof he claims, as author (or proprietor, as the case may be), in conformity with the act of Congress entitled 'An act for the encouragement and protection of dramatic compositions, designed and suitable for public representation, by securing to the authors and proprietors of the same certain rights during the time herein mentioned.

"Clerk of said district."

For which record the clerk shall be entitled to receive from the person claiming such right as aforesaid fifty cents, and the like sum for every copy under seal, actually given to such person or its assigns; and the certificates of such entry, and every certified duplicate thereof attested as aforesaid, shall be prima facie evidence in all the courts of the United States, and the state courts hereafter referred to, of the fact of deposit of such title page. And it shall be the duty of the clerk of such district court, at least once in each year, to transmit a certified list of all such records of such title pages, and the dates of record, to the Secretary of State, to be preserved in his office.

3. And be it further enacted, That if any manager, actor, or other person or persons, from and after the recording of the title of any such dramatic composition according to this act, shall, within the period of ten years thereafter, copy, act, perform, or represent, or cause to be copied, acted, performed, or represented, such dramatic composition, in whole or in part, or in any manner aid the same, or shall in any manner use or appropriate, or cause to be used or appropriated, the title of such dramatic composition, by applying it to any piece or composition, without the express consent in writing of the said author or proprietor, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, he or they shall be liable for damages, to be sued and recovered by action on the case, and prosecuted precisely with costs of suit, in any court of the United States, or in any state court within whose jurisdiction said defendant or defendants may be found, such damages in all cases to be ruled and assessed at such sum not less than one hundred dollars for every such offence, and fifty dollars for every subsequent copying, acting or performance, as to the court having cognizance thereof shall appear to be just; and shall also be guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to indictment therefor in any court in the district in which such offence may be committed, in such sum of one hundred dollars for each offence, or imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than thirty days, or both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court having cognizance thereof.

4. And be it further enacted, That all acts or portions of acts heretofore passed and in conflict with this act, relative to the representation of dramatic compositions, be, and the same are hereby, repealed:—Provided, nevertheless, that this act shall not in any manner affect any rights which any author or proprietor of any dramatic composition to proceed at law or in equity, in any court of the United States, or in any state court, for the enforcement, in other or better manner, of his rights, legal or equitable, at common law, in any dramatic composition of which he may be the author or proprietor.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, made the following report on this bill:—The sub-committee, to whom was referred the Senate bill entitled "A bill for the encouragement and protection of dramatic composition designed and suitable for public representation, by securing to the authors or proprietors of the same certain rights during the time herein mentioned," respectfully report:—

That after full consideration of the bill they have come to the conclusion that it ought to be reported back to the Senate with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The dramatic compositions intended to be protected are such as are designed and suitable for public performance or representation only, and not for publication. What is the character of such compositions? Compositions that will not bear to be published by printing, and thus come under the protection of the laws of copyright, can scarcely be fit for publication by performance or representation. Is it meant to include in the bill, as the usage, scenes, sentiments and dialogues which the public would not tolerate in print? Or, are we to understand that these dramatic compositions are so light and airy, so excessively frivolous, as not to be worthy to be published by any and all printing? Either one or the other way, if too immoral or too frivolous to be published in the ordinary mode, they can scarcely be worthy of the extraordinary legislation proposed.

Authors and legal proprietors who are citizens of the United States are the parties to be protected. Legal proprietors must mean the assignees or authors, for it is impossible to see how any person can become the legal proprietor of an unpublished composition except by assignment of the author. If the bill proposed to give to authors only a monopoly in their compositions for ten years, it would have more claim to favorable regards than it has in its present shape. As it now stands, it is manifestly for the benefit of foreign importers, and is the prejudice of home productions.

The form in which the bill executes its purpose of protection is highly objectionable. Not the composition, but the title of it is to be filed in the office of the district court, who is to record the same in a book; and for ten years after such recording of the title page any manager, actor, or other person who shall "copy, act, perform, or represent, or cause to be copied, acted, performed, or represented, such dramatic composition, in whole or in part, or in any manner aid in the same, or shall in any manner use or appropriate, or cause to be used or appropriated, the title of such dramatic composition, or any other dramatic composition without or against the consent of the author or proprietor," or their personal representatives shall be liable to a civil suit for damages, "in all cases to be rated and assessed at such sum not less than one hundred dollars for the first offence, and fifty dollars for every subsequent copying, acting or performance, as to the court having cognizance thereof shall appear to be just." And besides these civil penalties the offender is to be indictable for a misdemeanor, and liable to be fined not less than one hundred dollars, or to be imprisoned for not less than ten nor more than thirty days, or to be both fined and imprisoned, according to the discretion of the court.

Now, not to insist upon the extraordinary indelicacy of fixing by legislation the minimum of damages in a civil suit, and of setting aside trial by jury, and substituting the discretion of the court in a question of damages, it is observed that these provisions of the bill would be prolific of litigation of a very vexatious sort. The English and American courts have had many cases as to the identity of publications under the laws of copyright, which are often quite difficult; but the questions that will arise under this law will be of a more delicate and subtle page only is upon record. That may not be appropriated to any other composition; but suppose some author, not recognizing the source of his inspiration, reproduces a thought, an expression, or a scene which belongs to that title page, or some actor enters a dinner party with a recitation of passages from the protected play, or a newspaper reporter, after witnessing a performance, quotes from memory, or some critic, or an ignorant play-goer, quite unconscious that what he goes to witness is familiar, and, "voilà," in this manner, the perpetration of a misdemeanor, in each and all of these cases, and in many more that might be imagined, the offender, under the bill, could be sued and fined. These people would all be punishable because the government had taken the title page of the production under its protection. They might reply that it was not the title page but the body of the composition that they had copied, acted, or represented, went by another name; but what they had copied, acted, or represented, went by another name than that which was recorded in the clerk's office. How easily the name of a play may be varied and the lay itself preserved in substance, while the plot, scenes, situations and characters remain unchanged, is shown by the very amusing account which Mr. Charles Reade gives in his book entitled "The Eighth Commandment," of a play entitled "Poverty and Pride," which he translated and adapted from a French drama, "Les Pauvres de Paris." Having fairly purchased the play from its French authors, and offered it for the consideration of the London managers, he tells us that "the very next day, walking along the Strand, I came bump upon a board placed at the door of the Strand theatre; on that board was a poster announcing, 'The Pride of Poverty;' or, The Real Poor of London,' taken from 'Les Pauvres de Paris.'" He instituted a bill in equity against the author or legal proprietor of this piratical version of the French play, but the defendant, who was duly advertised all the more sympathy and patronage from the public on account of what seemed to be a legal persecution of an enterprising caterer for the public amusement.

Indeed, not only did Mr. Reade fail in equity to procure injunction against the piratical play, but he found himself sued in damages for slandering the title of the pirate. This happened under the English copyright law, and if that very comprehensive enactment proved insufficient to protect an honest adapter of a foreign play, how is this bill to shield the body of a play whose head only is protected by a public record? The title of a play is as changeable as the scenes of a theatre. Instead of being applied to other compositions, the recorded title will be changed and the pirated play will wear new colors, but be essentially the same composition as that intended to be protected.

Such efforts to protect at law the evanescent and trifling interests of our lightest kind of literature must always prove abortive. If this bill should become a law, many unseemly conflicts may be anticipated, worse than those that have arisen under the copyright law. The courts will continually be vexed with complaints of plagiarism and piracy, while the hand of justice will be unable to redress them. Many innocent parties will fall under the penalties of the law, and the litigation, vexatious as it will be, will fall to accomplish the purposes intended by it.

If it is worth while to try to protect a manuscript play, let the whole of it be recorded in some public office where the world may obtain knowledge of its contents; but let not the law become a trap for innocent people, by treating the composition as sacred, when only its title has been recorded.

Other objections to this bill might be stated, but we think it is enough that no public exigency demands an act of such questionable legislation, and, therefore we recommend that it be negatived.

Appended we give extracts from the copyright laws of the United States, as revised, consolidated and amended by Act of Congress, approved July 8th, 1870.

Sec. 102. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall print or publish any manuscript whatever, without the consent of the author or proprietor first obtained (if such author or proprietor be a citizen of the United States, or resident therein), shall be liable to said author or proprietor for all damages occasioned by such injury, to be recovered by action on the case in any court of competent jurisdiction.

103. And be it further enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the importing, publishing, republication, or sale of any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph, written, composed, or made by any person not a citizen of the United States nor resident therein.

THE JUMPING CHAMPIONSHIP.—We had a visit from Ned Searles, the champion jumper, on the 10th inst., and in response to the offer of Tom Allen to back a man against him, he says that he will make a match to jump at Saratoga, Syracuse, Utica, Albany, New York or Scranton, Pa., but he cannot go to St. Louis. If Allen is agreeable to the above, Searles will make the match for as much as $1,000 a side, the conditions to be as follows:—Single standing jump, spirit level, six trials, spring shoes barred out. If Tom consents, let him forward a deposit to this office, and it will be at once covered by Ned. The latter also states that he will make a match with Bob Way to jump three jumps, three trials, upon the conditions above specified, the match to be for from $500 to $1,000 a side, and to be decided wherever Way chooses.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

THE FIRST AND LAST KISS.

Thy lips are quiet and thine eyes are still,
Cold, colorless and all thy placid face,
Thy form has now only the shape's grace;
My words wake not thy voice, nor can they fill
Thine eyes with light. Before fate's mighty will
I sit with thee and Death in this lone place.
And hold thy hands that are so white and chill.
I always loved thee, which thou did'st not know,
Though well he knew whose wedded love thou wert;
Now thou art dead, I may raise up the fold
That hides thy face, and by thee, bending low,
For the first time and last before we part,
Kiss the curv'd lips—calm, beautiful and cold.

ACTION FOR SEDUCTION.

ANOTHER REVEREND IN TROUBLE.

A remarkable action for seduction, "Davies vs. Gray," was tried at the recent Worcester, Eng., assizes. The defendant pleaded "Not Guilty," and a denial of the services. The plaintiff was a fish-hook maker, in the employ of Messrs. Hemmings & Co., at Redditch, and the father of a family of six daughters, all of whom, with the exception of one married to a person named Layton, lived at home, at Besley-mill, near Redditch. Two of the daughters were named respectively Margaret and Rebecca, and were of the respective ages of 26 and 24 years. The defendant was the minister of the Independent

BASE BALL.

MUTUAL vs. ATLANTIC.

THE DEFEAT OF THE ATLANTICS.

A Closely Contested and Exciting Game.

THE MUTUALS THE VICTORS—SCORE 9 TO 7.

The return game of the series between these clubs for the championship of the United States, the first of which was won last July by the Atlantics by a score of 15 to 13, took place on the Capitoline grounds, Brooklyn, on Aug. 9th, in the presence of about four thousand people, the result being the success of the Mutual nine by a score of 9 to 7 after a remarkably close contest, occupying two hours, the play on both sides being first class.

The time was when ten thousand people would have been gathered to witness the contest between these old rival organizations; but the short sighted policy of some of our leading professional nines in allowing the first or second game of a series to go by default of any earnest effort to win, in order to ensure the playing of a third game with its result of additional gate money receipts, has had the effect of so lessening the interest taken in these games that there has been a falling off in the attendance at the leading contests of at least fifty per cent, besides a loss of prestige and reputation not easily recoverable. The pecuniary success attendant upon the Cincinnati club since 1869, and the deep interest manifested in their games has been due as much to the fact that they have always made the most earnest effort to win, as it has been to their fine play. What with "practice," "social" and other gate-money games, and the loss of the first or second of a series in order to ensure a third game, the majority of the professional clubs have so lessened the attraction which would otherwise have characterized their contests that now we see first class games attended by only a few hundred spectators where thousands used to congregate before. We think the professional clubs throughout the country are beginning to see the folly of this style of thing, and seeing it they are beginning to retrieve their lost prestige. They will find it hard work, however, to get back to the old position when to play to win every match was the rule of each season.

In this game there was evidently a fixed determination on both sides to win if it were possible. We have not seen the Atlantics play with such earnest effort to win as they did in this game since their match with the Red Stockings. Their play in that noted contest proved to their friends that under ordinary circumstances there was not another nine in the country strong enough to win a ball from them when they went in for victory. It is worthy of remark that the Atlantics, in their game of June 14th, scored eight first base hits in nine innings of the game, against eleven by the Red Stockings, they earning but one run in the nine innings against two by the Reds. In their tenth and eleventh innings they added six first base hits to their score to three by the Reds. In this game with the Mutuals the Atlantics scored eight first base hits—just the same as in their game with the Cincinnati nine—against seventeen by the Mutuals. It will be seen, therefore, that their play at the bat in nine innings was the same in both games, but that of the Mutuals was more successful in its results, owing to the lucky bounding of the too elastic ball in their favor. But without further preface we give the details of the innings, the game being well worth a descriptive report.

Play was called at 3.25 P. M., at which time the Atlantics took the field and the Mutuals sent Hatfield to the bat. The ball selected by the Atlantics was one of Rose medium balls, having 1½ ounce and three ounces of rubber in it, just three-quarters of an ounce too much, as the ball proved to be lively enough to bound over the fielders' heads, thus giving bases on hits to batsmen when, but for the elasticity of the ball, they would have been easily put out. Hatfield benefited by this on the first hit he made, he making his 1st by the ball bounding over Pike's head at right short. Eggler followed with a bounder and made his base, but, by Patterson's hit to Pearce, he was put out at 2d by Pike, Patterson retiring at first by a pretty double play, Hatfield, in the meantime, getting in. Nelson and E. Mills then hit well for their bases, but before they could get round Martin was put out on a foul fly by Smith, the innings closing for one run. Pearce led off on the Atlantic side with a daisy cutter, the ball passing Swandel and Eggler untouched, Dick reaching the 3d base by the two misfits. Smith was then put out easily by Eggler on the fly, Start following with a good hit. By Chapman's high ball to Patterson and the good fielding of Zettlein's ball by Hatfield to E. Mills, the side was put out before Start could get in, Ferguson previously having had a life given him by Hatfield and E. Mills, Pearce's run being the only one scored. This was an even commencement and gave promise of a close contest. The betting had been at odds on the Atlantics, several of the club betting 100 to 80 on their success.

In the next three innings not a run was scored on either side, so effective was the pitching of Zettlein and Wolters, and so finely was it supported by the fielders of both nines. In the 2d innings Start and Hall made two fine catches, and Pike a good stop and throw to Start, thereby retiring the Mutuals in nearly one, two, three order, McDonald alone securing a base on a hit. On the other side, in this innings, Hall made his base by a hit, but Pike was prettily caught out by Martin, and Swandel by McDonald, Hall being nicely run out by Hatfield. In the 3d innings Ferguson and McDonald put out the first two strikers, on the Mutual side, by good catches, and Pike the third by a fine stop and throw to Start; while, on the other side, Patterson made a beautiful catch of a low ball, and C. Mills and Nelson caught out the next two men. In the 4th innings Chapman disposed of the first Mutual striker; Martin and C. Mills then earned their bases; Start gave a life to Wolters, and Pike put the last man out. On the other side, Hatfield and C. Mills put the three Atlantics out in succession, Hatfield making a fine play on a throw by C. Mills to second. This left the score at the close of the 4th innings at 1 to 1, with the game in an exceedingly interesting position.

In the 6th innings Ferguson disposed of the two first strikers on tips, and had Hall held the ball Patterson sent him the Mutuals would have seen Chicago for the fourth time in the game; but George dropped it, and after Nelson had made a base by his hit, Patterson got in on Chapman's failure to pick up Nelson's ball and his wild throw afterwards to home, E. Mills being last man out by Pearce's fine fielding. On the other side the Atlantics were whitewashed for the fourth time in succession, Hatfield, C. Mills and Nelson catching them out in one, two, three order. This left the score at 2 to 1 in favor of the Mutuals at the close of the 5th innings, and, as a matter of course, their stock took an upward turn in the market.

The contest now became deeply interesting, and those of the crowd who had invested largely on the result began to watch the play with anxious countenances. The play of the Mutuals was such as to show conclusively the benefit they had derived from their well managed tour to the west, for they never worked together better than in this game, nor did Wolters ever have such good support in any game played with the Atlantics.

In the sixth innings Pearce disposed of the first Mutual striker, but C. Mills and Wolters hit safely for their first base; the latter, however, fell a victim to Swandel's poor hit, and as Pearce captured Hatfield directly afterwards, the innings closed for one run. This left the Mutuals in the van by a score of 3 to 1, but the Atlantics had an innings to spare, and the way they opened play in their sixth innings looked as if they had finally settled upon finishing things off in a canter, for Pike led off with a pretty grounder and McDonald sent a hot one bounding to left field for three bases, Pike scoring his run. Pearce, however, popped up a high one to the out-field, which Hatfield went after and handled in style, and after C. Mills had disposed of Smith, Hatfield attended to Start prettily on the fly, and consequently those scored by Pike and McDonald were the only runs obtained. These were enough to tie the score, 3 to 3, so the seventh innings was commenced evenly again. Eggler led off with a hit to Smith, which Charley failed to attend to, and Eggler had a life given him. Patterson then hit for his base, as did Nelson and E. Mills, the latter getting two bases by his hit. Eggler should have been given out at home base, Ferguson fairly touching him, but the umpire did not think so, and Eggler had a life. Martin was the first victim, Hall making a pretty catch, E. Mills being put out, owing to his leaving second base before the ball had been settled in Hall's hands, Pike afterwards capping Charley Mills by a fine stop and throw to first base, the innings closing with the three runs scored by Eggler, Patterson and Nelson, only two runs being earned. On the Atlantic side in this innings Chapman was well caught by C. Mills; Ferguson by Swandel, and Zettlein gave Eggler an excellent chance to catch him out, but the ball was dropped, and, as Hall made his base and Pike hit for a home run, three runs were scored, McDonald being left after earning his base, owing to Pearce popping up a high one for Eggler to take. This was quite an exciting innings, as the result once more left the score a tie—6 to 6. Things were now narrowing down to close quarters. Only two more innings were left, and yet the advantage as yet was with neither side.

Wolters opened play in the eighth innings with a one base hit to McDonald, but as the elastic ball bounded over McDonald's head, Wolters reached in third by his hit. Pearce then disposed of Swandel prettily by a stop and throw to Start, but the ball Hatfield sent to Pike bounded too lively for him to field in time and Hatfield had a life. But for these mishaps from the elastic ball the Mutuals would have been retired for a blank. Hatfield was on first base when Eggler hit a liner to right short, which went into Pike's hands. Pike let the ball bound out of his hands, and, seeing Hatfield leaving first base, he threw the ball to Start, and if Start had first held the ball before touching the base, then have touched Hatfield on the base, and then have put his foot on the base, a fine double play would have been made. As it was, however, Start received the ball on the base, thus relieving Hatfield from being forced to vacate his base, the striker alone being put out. The umpire, however, decided that Pike had caught the ball, and yet did not give Hatfield out, for if the catch was made Hatfield was also out. Afterwards, by good hits by Patterson and E. Mills, Hatfield got in, Hall putting the last man out. This placed the Mutuals in the van by a score of 8 to 6, and the Atlantics now went in to get square again. But Smith—who batted poorly through the game—tipped out. Start was prettily disposed of by Hatfield and C. Mills captured Chapman, thereby leaving the lead in the hands of the Mutuals for the first time in the game, the close of the 8th innings leaving the totals at 8 to 6 in their favor.

Now came the tug of war, and the crowd became positively excited as the Mutuals went to the bat for the last time. The Atlantics went to the field, looking serious and anxious and evidently more unnerved than is their wont in a game of the kind. C. Mills led off at the bat, and sent a hot and daisy cutter between Pearce's legs, Wolters following with another good grounder. Swandel, however, was captured by Pearce and Start, and Hatfield would have been also but for one of those lucky bounds of the ball, but he escaped, and one run had been scored, when Smith put the next two men out, leaving the total score of the Mutuals at 9. Now it was that the most exciting period of the contest was commenced. Ferguson opened with a high ball which looked as if it would go over Martin's head, but he backed well for it and held it in style. Zettlein followed with a ball to Hatfield, and as John threw it low, and Ed. Mills failed to hold it, the "Charmer" had a life given him. By a good hit of Hall's and a passed ball Zettlein got round home. Pike now came to the bat and another home run was looked for, but Wolters knew better than to give him a ball for the purpose, and so Pike eventually had to retire on a foul bound, well picked up by C. Mills—two out, one run in and Hall at 2d. McDonald now came in to the rescue, but popped up a high ball to Eggler's position, and it being held well, the game was ended, and the Mutuals retired from the field the victors by a score of 9 to 7. The score of runs earned being at 4 to 2 in their favor. The score:—

TOUR OF THE MANSFIELD CLUB.

During the late tour of the Mansfield Club, of Middletown, Conn., through Massachusetts, they played the Lowells on the 2d. The Mansfields claim the championship of Connecticut, and have only lost two games this year, having been beaten by the Stars, of Brooklyn, and the Mutuals, of Springfield. They were rather out of practice in this game, and without one or two of their regular nine. Their uniform, which is similar to that of the Princeton College nine, consists of white caps and pants, and blue shirts and stockings, and is quite pretty. With two exceptions they are good fielders, and are quite strong at the bat. The game, which was called at 3.45 P. M., took place on the Union grounds. The Lowells, as usual, had out a poor nine, Jones, of the Somersets, making his first appearance with them. The day was hot and the sun shone directly in the fielders' eyes, rendering fly-catching very difficult. A medium ball was used, and the elasticity was batted out of it at the end of two innings. The game opened evenly and was exciting throughout, ten innings being necessary to complete it. Though the visitors were the best batters, the Lowells' fielding gave them the game. Noble and Furnias in the in-field, and Tipper and Bentley in the out-field, proved themselves good players, the two latter making several beautiful catches. Of the Lowells, Miller and Geyer alone batted with any success, while Jones and Gorham caught excellently. The veteran Lowell captained the game and played well throughout. We append the score:—

MUTUAL vs. ATHLETIC, OF BROOKLYN.

Last week the Brooklyn amateur Athletics, after defeating the Resolutes at Elizabeth, had a pretty game with the Mutuals on Aug. 11th, on the Union grounds, the game proving to be one of the best played of the season, and also the quickest ninth innings game thus far. The Athletics had out their full nine. The Mutuals did not obtain the lead until the second innings, and at the close of the fourth the tally showed them to be in the van by the totals of 12 to 3, they having done some very effective batting. In the last five innings, however, the Athletics had the better of their professional adversaries, for in these innings they scored 7 to the Mutuals' 4. The final result was the success of the Mutuals, but only by a score of 17 to 10. Eggler carried off the palm in fielding on the Mutual side, and Booth and Bond on the part of the Athletics. In batting, Wolters and Eggler led the score on the one side, and Wiggins and Booth on the other. The game was just finished as the rain came down in torrents. We give the score:—

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

STAR vs. CHAMPION.

The first game of a series for the amateur championship was played on the 9th inst., at Jersey City, between the Champion Club, of that place, and the Stars, of Brooklyn. The Stars had a walk over from the beginning, as they found no trouble in hitting Willis; while the Champions, like most other clubs, were unable to bat Cummings with any success. The game was well played, with the exception of the last innings, by the Stars, Rogers catching (instead of Jewell, who split his fingers). The Champions, assisted by a couple of muffs and passed balls, made five runs, leaving the total at ten, thus making four games out of eighteen in which double figures have been scored against the Stars. The game was witnessed by a large crowd. The following is the score:—

ARLINGTON vs. JEFFERSON

A very pretty game was played on August 6th by these Washington, D. C., clubs, on the Olympic's grounds, which resulted in favor of the Arlingtons. The fielding of the Jeffersons was not up to their regular standard, and at the bat they did not do much, the swift pitching of Warden being too much for them. The Arlingtons were slightly discomfited at first by the slow pitching of Anderson, but they finally got "the hang" of it and batted in good, heavy style. The handsomest hit of the game was made by Warden, who secured a clean home run. Of the Jeffersons, Bangs and Anderson alone deserve especial mention. Of fielding on the part of the Arlingtons Price bore off the palm; in the second innings he made a beautiful one hand running catch. He was also followed close by F. Schreiner at the third base. The score is as follows:—

NASHVILLE vs. BLUE STOCKINGS.

A match game between the above clubs was played in Nashville, Tenn., on August 5th, which resulted in a victory for the Nashville club by a score of 43 to 19. A lively ball was used, which accounts for the large score. Kelly's pitching was effective and kept down the score of the Blue Stockings considerably. Below is the score:—

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Aug. 15, '70.

THE TRAGEDY now being performed in the old world, with Europe as the theatre of representation, and Louis Napoleon and King William as the stars, is the great sensation of the age; Kings, queens, and potentates viewing the performance from the private boxes, while the whole civilized world looks on with various emotions, now applauding, now execrating, the efforts of the Prussian actors. How unfortunate for the interests of the Parisian Lise the star of France; while the "little people," those "poor players," who bear the brunt of the strife in every dramatic representation, and without whom nor kings nor stars could gain a "single hand," receive no cheering word, but having done all the heavy work, are sacrificed in the cause and carried off the stage of life like so much "dead w ood," which does not imply that such actors are at the best but "sticks." But the bloody show must go on—ambition must be gratified, and peoples' wrath appeased. How long "the season" will last, depends on the sleeping or waking of the theatrical active managers, and the lasting "strength of the company."..... Among the novelties to be presented to the public during the coming season is that of the "Wooden Headed Acrobats," which Tony Denier, the clown, secured in Europe, and which will orm a feature of the performance of the Fox and Denier troupe. These acrobats are said to be wonderful pieces of ingenuity, and will no doubt add greatly to the interest of the combination. ..... Among the wooden heads remind us of Tom Hood's "Marionette Man's Story," in one of his earliest comic almanacs. It was full of fun, yet pregnant with a most trenchant satire upon wooden actors in general. For example, the "Marionette Man" says:—

"The only legitimate drama of the present time is Marronettes. No living actor is on a level with 'em. You mayn't appreciate 'em praps, because your tastes has become debauched by seeing real restiwayy accidents, and real fires, and real murders on the stage, that you've lost your appetite for everything else. I give you my word of honor as a Marionette man, that I've seen many live players of the present day doing the heart-reading, yet they have failed to make me drop the tributary tear. But with Marronettes I've had to give way. I know that their feelings is not put on. They come natural to 'em, and you know that's very different, which makes it so touchin'! Many is the time my hands have so twitched pulling them strings, at seeing the poor senseless things go through their business so feelingly, in comparison with other actors, that I have let go, and called to my mate and said:—'Take those blessed strings, and go on with the performance, for I can't, or my heart will bust!'

"I, gentlemen, mine is the legitimate dramy, and I don't go below it, exceptin' praps in the matter of ballets. We do a ballet be there's a class of our customers among whom a ballet draws, omerous class wants it, and I give 'em one now and then. But is a mere ballet. All my dancers' legs are fixed not to rise h an angle of forty-five degrees. Their skirts is long. Their clothing is drowsers and not cobwebs, and their dresses is from up to the neck. And the most particular pictur of perfection is seminaries for young ladies have given me a testimonial that my ballet is modest and improving to the mind, and did no more raise a blush than, for that matter, any other ballet to do.

"I had the handsomest Marronette figure as anybody ever see, made expressly for me, with ten strings and a India rubber spine. He had a lofty brow and a complexion like the beautifullest head out of a hair dresser's window, only it possible, more wavy, and curly hair for him to pass his fingers through. His knees, for suppleness, you never see the like of, and the way he would go down on 'em to declare his passion for the female figures was sweet to behold. It always used to make the women folk in the audience sniff sort of hysterical and say, 'Lor! now, ain't it just for all the world like life itself?' We called him Romeo, being constructed expressly for him as one, and like knees and also his spine. No one ever came up along side of him in that character. There was no ballet figure ever did so well as Romeo, especially in the love making; and he had grow'd so perfect in this he would very nearly do it without any strings at all. He would have done it, because his feelings would sometimes so carry him away. I'd defy you to have known whether you had hold of his strings or not!"

Isn't that a pungent criticism upon some live Romeos we have seen in our day?..... And mentioning curiosities, a litpicy, Ohio, paper lately created quite an excitement by the announcement that a child had been born in that town with a perfectly formed face before and one behind. Of course this eclipsed the double-headed girl, the Siamese Twins and all similar curiosities, and forthwith managers and working agents became almost wild with a desire to possess this extraordinary marvel of nature. Working agents and go-ahead men were sent out with all the necessary bait to allure this great curiosity to their nets; proprietors of museums and side shows saw a fortune in the child, and competition was rife among the the appreciation of their efforts in the cause. We suggest that the gift take the form of an urn, for, having killed and in-urned the odious law, they have fully earned such a memento..... Awful hot last week, wasn't it? Awful hot all summer, for that matter, upsetting all theories and calculations of the weather-wise and otherwise ories and calculations of the weather-wise and otherwise people, as you may see by the appended bit of poetry, ground out by "Our Jim," with the thermometer at ninety-six in the shade:—

YOU CAN'T ALWAYS TELL.

Sulky and red, with a burning glare,
The sun went down to his bed;
Angry and sullen, indeed, was he,
Sulky and fierce and red.

As they turned their eyes to the setting sun,
And wiped the sweat away,
"To-morrow it will be hotter yet"—
Every one said, said they.

And every one grunted, and swore and growled,
And groaned and fumed together;
The oldest inhabitant never had known
Such outrageously hot weather.

The morrow came, as it always does,
(Excuse us if we're uncivil),
And the rain it fell, and the wind it blew
As cold as the very devil!

It is easy enough to prognosticate—
And signs are all very well—
But the longer we live the more we believe
That you can't always tell.

City Summary.

"SIYALA" continues to attract as good audiences at the Grand Opera House as could be expected to assemble at any in-door amusement during this canicular weather, and Mme. Kathi Lanner and the principal members of the Viennoise Ballet Troupe perform their chaste and artistic evolutions with as much spirit and sang froid as though the thermometer was only at zero. It is no pleasant task, with the thermometer at nearly 90 deg., to perform saltatorial feats which exert and strain to their utmost tension every muscle of the body, and at the same time keep the countenance wreathed with smiles, when in reality the sentiments of the heart are struggling to find entrance from the mouth in a few "cuss words." And yet the popular idea, among the great public, whose money purchases such amusement, is that an artist's life is one of luxury and ease, with hours of leisure to receive the flattering adulations of the listless loungers of the foulkahs, to whom a hearty expression of approbation by the hands, at this season, is too great an exertion, and would throw them into a profuse state of perspiration. Could they but get a glimpse at the rehearsal in the morning, and witness the amount of practice, real hard labor, that is required to keep the limbs in supple condition, and enable them to execute with such apparent ease and grace those wonderful pas and poses de force which delight their audiences by night, they would soon become convinced that an artist's life is one of toil and labor. But to return to the ballet, which we described at length in our issue of the past week, we would say that it has lost none of its attractiveness, and appears to be of a style which pleases a mixed audience much more than those of the severely classical school. The burlesque elements introduced in the first act are artistically executed—artistically, in the highest sense of the word—for up to the point where the ridicule commences, every feat is performed with as much gravity and apparent real exertion as would be required in the same feat without the burlesque element. Take, for instance, the feat performed by the juggler of Herculean fame, with the two weights marked 100 kilogrammes each; mark how his muscles knot when he raises them from the floor and extends them at arms length; and yet, when his head is severed, a little glass ax and a few pegs, he picks them up, one in each hand, and with a smile illuminating her little face, runs with them from the stage, and the majority of the audience then, for the first time, perceive the point. This ballet troupe will, in all probability, continue their performances until about the middle of September, when a season of opera bouffe will be inaugurated, unless any of the male members of the company should be prevented leaving France by the war now being waged, somewhat crab like, against Prussia. Referring to the war reminds us of a paragraph we recently read in Gallignani's Messenger, to the effect that Mlle. Silla, the prima donna of the expected troupe, and one of Schneider's most formidable rivals, was discovered by the audience at one of the café chantants in the Champs Elysees, on a recent Sunday evening, and was by them "carried in triumph to the stage and forced to sing the Marseillaise, an injunction to which she yielded with more good nature than many would have shown under similar circumstances."

BUCKLEY'S SERENADERS closed their present season at San Francisco Hall on Saturday evening, August 13th, having performed five consecutive weeks, with a success not to have been anticipated at such a warm season of the year as it has proved. Many of the artists have been changed from time to time, a record of which has appeared in our columns. With their departure our city is left without a minstrel band. They will commence a brief season at Mrs. F. B. Conway's Park Theatre, Brooklyn, L. I., this evening, August 15th. On August 13th, G. Swaine Buckley received a benefit at San Francisco Hall.

J. K. EMMET continues the star attraction at Wallack's Theatre, appearing every night in his character of Fritz. It is said that Mr. Gayler is writing another play for this artist.

WILLIAM HENDERSON, of the Lydia Thompson Troupe, was in this city on Friday last, arranging for the coming winter engagement at Wood's.

A GENTLEMAN OF THIS CITY has written a local burlesque entitled "The Infant Mefistofeles," for Miss Olivia Rand.

AT THE THEATRE COMIQUE during the past week the gala bill consisted of George W. Thompson, who appeared during the week in an original sketch written by himself, entitled "Love's Disguises; or, the Dutchman in Turkey," in which he played the character of Moses Needle very effectively. His dialect is very good, and he possesses comic talent in no small degree. The balance of the programme was good, well performed and served to attract large audiences during the entire week. A very great change will be made in the programme for the present week, chief among the features of which will be a comic trick pantomime by Charles Abbott, which is announced with new scenery, costumes, new tricks, and is entitled "Nick-Nack; or, Harlequin Will O' the Wisp, and the Fairy of the Mystic Dell." It will be in six scenes, and Charles Abbott will personate the Clown, C. Chrisde, the Pantaloon; John Burke, the Harlequin; Miss Carrie Haines, the Columbine, and Miss Madeline Hardy, the Fairy of the Mystic Dell. In addition to the pantomime, Master Barney will appear in his Dutch specialties. G. W. Jester, the man with the talking hand, will continue his ventriloquial conversations; Add Ryman will make a few remarks upon the topics of the day. The ballet of the "Primroses" will be danced by the truly excellent ballet corps of this establishment; W. Barry will indulge in a song and dance; Add Ryman and Johnny Hart will illustrate the mysteries of "Bruised and Cured;" Mlle. Alexandrina and the Clinetop Sisters will execute a gun dance; Johnny Queen will appear as the Broadway Dancing Master; W. West will indulge in a song and a banjo solo, and in a sketch called "Going to the Races;" J. C. Stewart, Add Ryman and Madeline Hardy are to appear, thus forming an attractive evening's entertainment.

SANDY SPENCER, it is rumored, has obtained a lease of the New York Theatre for variety purposes, and after making extensive alterations therein, will open it to the public as a Theatre Comique of the first class.

NIBLO'S GARDEN will reopen this evening for the fall and winter season. During the recess the theatre has been thoroughly renovated. The auditorium, lobbies and main entrance from Broadway have been entirely re-frescoed in chaste and elegant designs, the prevailing colors of which are French grey, white, gold and crimson. Every cushion in the house has been replaced by a new one, and the fronts of the various circles have been upholstered in crimson plush. The fronts of the circles and panels of French grey, relieved by ornamental medallions of crimson, bordered with white and gold. The private boxes are hung with curtains of gold brocatel and crimson, covered with a drapery of rich lace. The chairs are upholstered in crimson plush and the iron borders of the same painted in yellow ochre, relieved with ornaments of red, the railing of the orchestra being decorated in the same manner. In the dome the figures of the muses of Tragedy, Comedy, Music and the Fine Arts appear in fresco. On either side of the entrance to the main lobby are large mirrors, also one at each end of the same, and mirrors will also be found at the heads of the staircases leading to the dress circle. The appearance of the whole is neat, tasteful, light and airy, and like a new theatre. The managers and officers of the theatre are as follows:—Henry C. Jarrett and Henry D. Palmer, lessees and managers; Leon J. Vincent, stage manager; J. A. Zimmerman, treasurer; Benson Sherwood, master machinist; Voegtlin, scenic artist; the Laureys, costumers; Benedict, properties; Sig. G. Operti, leader of orchestra. The stock company consists of the following artists:—Messrs. F. C. Bangs, W. R. Floyd, G. D. Chaplin, C. Miran, H. A. Rendle, C. Wilkinson, E. B. Holmes, E. K. Collier, T. P. Mack, H. A. Enos, E. B. Dennison, T. Tyson, Le Brun; Mme. Ponisi, the Misses Louise Moore, Rose Cline and Ada Strickland, Mr. Laurence Barrett will make his first appearance in eight years in the city of New York this evening, and commence a star engagement of four weeks' duration, appearing in the romantic drama, by John Brougham and Paul Feval, entitled the "Duke's Motto," which will be presented with the following cast:—

The stock company at this establishment is to be materially changed from time to time. The policy of the management will most probably be to engage the best artists they are able to secure for the plays that may be produced, in reality ottimes affording a better cast than if they were compelled to cast their parts to a company instead of adapting their company to the play. Lotta will be the succeeding star to Mr. Barrett, and we are promised a new play by Boucicault, written expressly for her.

KELLY AND LEON'S NEW MINSTREL HALL, which is to be opened to the public on August 22d, is located on Broadway, immediately opposite Eleventh street, and has been hitherto known as the worthy old Academy. Having secured a lease of this place for a term of years, it is now undergoing suitable alterations to adapt it to the purpose intended. A new stage has been built, well stocked with scenery, and a gallery erected on three sides of the hall. The lower floor is to remain without alteration, save to supply it with iron folding chairs of the latest improved pattern. A balcony will be erected on the outside of the building at the altitude of the second story, and will extend across the entire front of the building. The seating capacity will be about 750.

M'LLE ALBERTINA, now dancing at the Grand Opera House, has been engaged at the Academy of Music, New Orleans, La., by Spalding, Bidwell and MacDonough, and will appear during the season at the other theatres in their circuit.

AT TONY PASTOR'S OPERA HOUSE, M'lle Irma, the "Statue Queen" will make her first appearance this evening in a series of living pictures. The other features to be presented may be briefly chronicled thus:—An interlude, the "Wrong Bottle," with Frank Kerns, Neise Seymour and others; song and dance, by Frank Bell; "La Grandalla," by Mario Gorendo; the Congo Band, by Seymour, Kerns, Sheppard, Carter and others; a medley dance by Amelia Gorendo; Tony Pastor in a budget of songs; Billy Carter in banjo solos and songs; "Storm Galop" by Helene Smith; Conner and Bradley in a song and dance; a new negro act, "Digging for Gold," by Seymour, Kerns and Sheppard; Ella Wesner as the City Swell, introducing new songs with rapid changes of costume, and Harry Gurr in his feats under water. The comic pantomime, entitled "Barber and Beadle," in which Master Martin and J. W. Wesley will appear, will conclude the performances. The company at this house is evidently a strong one.

LOTTA is at present sojourning at Fontainbleau, France, having visited London and Paris. She expects to sail for this country about August 30th, and will bring with her a new piece from the prolific pen of Dion Boucicault, for which she paid him a very liberal sum, we are informed. It will, prof ably, be produced at Niblo's Garden on Sept. 15th, her opening night.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE this evening, August 15th, the fall and winter season of 1870-71 will be inaugurated by the production of "Rip Van Winkle," with the eminent comedian, Mr. Joseph Jefferson, in the title role. The following is a complete list of the officers and attaches of the theatre and the stock company, obtained from an authoritative source:—Proprietor and manager, Edwin Booth; business manager, J. H. Magonigle; treasurer, Joseph Booth; assistants in the box office, H. R. Robson and R. B. Window; assistant in Mr. Magonigle's office, also head usher, Joe L. McDouall; stage manager, D. W. Authors, proprietors of compositions, managers, adapters, and all others in any way interested in such matters are referred to the report, as well as to extracts from the latest copyright laws, which are also published in connection with the defeated bill.

REPORTED ATTACK ON A MINSTREL TROUPE.—The daily papers find it rather difficult to get along these days without a sensation, so that if nothing genuine turns up, they rely on a fertile reportorial imagination for the article. Several instances of this kind have lately occurred, one of the last being an account, published by all the reliable dailies, of the falling through of the top of a menagerie wagon, in which were several wild animals, and on top of which a brass band was located; the latter, according to the story, were dumped among the lions and tigers, and several of the musicians were eaten by the rapacious animals. Well, this harrowing tale had not the slightest foundation in fact, but was the impure invention of some convivial writer. The New York Herald, of Aug. 13th, contained the following exciting report of an attack made by Indians on a minstrel troupe:—

"Three coaches of Wells, Fargo & Co., when about eight miles from Hastings Pass, en route for Austin, were stopped to-day by a party of Indians, numbering eighteen or twenty. Three passengers were killed, and the driver and several others severely wounded. Among the passengers were members of a troupe from the east—Duprez & Benedict's—who were to open to-night at Austin. Mr. Charles Reynolds was wounded in the foot, and is now in town and is not expected to recover. Mr. Duprez is lying at Pleasant Valley, six miles from here. Two of the troupe are missing. I could not ascertain their names. The killed were a Mr. Nicholson, a miner; Mr. Heinrich and Mr. Dougherty. The attack is supposed to have been made by white men, disguised as Indians, but I doubt it, as the Indians are quite troublesome about here."

Now we do not mean to assert, positively, that this statement is bogus, but, at the same time, our impression is that it is the "baseless fabrication of a dream," and that the Duprez and Benedict Minstrels will, when reliable news reaches us, be found to be all right, and that the alleged Indian attack on them had no existence save in the brain of some sharp chap who "writes for the papers." The Duprez party was composed of the following members, the names being taken from the list published in the manager's card in the CLIPPER:—Hughey Dougherty, Lewis Benedict, Charley Reynolds, Charles Gleason, Frank Kent, Gonsalvo Bishop, Julius Robinson, Frank Pankhurst, Fred. B. Naylor, Lewis Collins, Joseph Norrie, D. Swaebe Vernon, John Woolsey, Alphonse Bergeron, James Koehl, Fred Heinrich and Frank Dumont, with Charles H. Duprez as business manager, and a few others engaged in different capacities, the entire force numbering about twenty persons. Now it is not likely that this party were without arms of some kind, and if the stages contained other passengers it is scarcely probable that eighteen Indians would have attacked such a force. Although we hear from the troupe weekly, up to this writing, Monday, P. M., we have not heard a word concerning the alleged Indian attack, neither does our California correspondent make any allusion to it, and the news should have reached there by telegraph or otherwise. P. S.—Since the above was in type we have received a letter from Mr. Charles H. Duprez, one of the managers referred to, dated "Salt Lake House, Salt Lake City, U. T., August 8th," in which, after referring to the two performances given in that city by the troupe on August 3d and 4th, says:—"We leave here this afternoon for San Francisco, where we open next Monday, the 8th inst." &c. Therefore the troupe could not have been at the place mentioned, and gives us a still stronger benefit of the doubt. The more we look at it the more do we believe the report to be without foundation, and such, also, is our hope.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS will inaugurate the season in Philadelphia on Monday evening next, Aug. 22d, at their Eleventh street Opera House. Negro Minstrelsy.

REPORTED ATTACK ON A MINSTREL TROUPE.—The daily papers find it rather difficult to get along these days without a sensation, so that if nothing genuine turns up, they rely on a fertile reportorial imagination for the article. Several instances of this kind have lately occurred, one of the last being an account, published by all the reliable dailies, of the falling through of the top of a menagerie wagon, in which were several wild animals, and on top of which a brass band was located; the latter, according to the story, were dumped among the lions and tigers, and several of the musicians were eaten by the rapacious animals. Well, this harrowing tale had not the slightest foundation in fact, but was the impure invention of some convivial writer. The New York Herald, of Aug. 13th, contained the following exciting report of an attack made by Indians on a minstrel troupe:—

"Three coaches of Wells, Fargo & Co., when about eight miles from Hastings Pass, en route for Austin, were stopped to-day by a party of Indians, numbering eighteen or twenty. Three passengers were killed, and the driver and several others severely wounded. Among the passengers were members of a troupe from the east—Duprez & Benedict's—who were to open to-night at Austin. Mr. Charles Reynolds was wounded in the foot, and is now in town and is not expected to recover. Mr. Duprez is lying at Pleasant Valley, six miles from here. Two of the troupe are missing. I could not ascertain their names. The killed were a Mr. Nicholson, a miner; Mr. Heinrich and Mr. Dougherty. The attack is supposed to have been made by white men, disguised as Indians, but I doubt it, as the Indians are quite troublesome about here."

Now we do not mean to assert, positively, that this statement is bogus, but, at the same time, our impression is that it is the "baseless fabrication of a dream," and that the Duprez and Benedict Minstrels will, when reliable news reaches us, be found to be all right, and that the alleged Indian attack on them had no existence save in the brain of some sharp chap who "writes for the papers." The Duprez party was composed of the following members, the names being taken from the list published in the manager's card in the CLIPPER:—Hughey Dougherty, Lewis Benedict, Charley Reynolds, Charles Gleason, Frank Kent, Gonsalvo Bishop, Julius Robinson, Frank Pankhurst, Fred. B. Naylor, Lewis Collins, Joseph Norrie, D. Swaebe Vernon, John Woolsey, Alphonse Bergeron, James Koehl, Fred Heinrich and Frank Dumont, with Charles H. Duprez as business manager, and a few others engaged in different capacities, the entire force numbering about twenty persons. Now it is not likely that this party were without arms of some kind, and if the stages contained other passengers it is scarcely probable that eighteen Indians would have attacked such a force. Although we hear from the troupe weekly, up to this writing, Monday, P. M., we have not heard a word concerning the alleged Indian attack, neither does our California correspondent make any allusion to it, and the news should have reached there by telegraph or otherwise. P. S.—Since the above was in type we have received a letter from Mr. Charles H. Duprez, one of the managers referred to, dated "Salt Lake House, Salt Lake City, U. T., August 8th," in which, after referring to the two performances given in that city by the troupe on August 3d and 4th, says:—"We leave here this afternoon for San Francisco, where we open next Monday, the 8th inst." &c. Therefore the troupe could not have been at the place mentioned, and gives us a still stronger benefit of the doubt. The more we look at it the more do we believe the report to be without foundation, and such, also, is our hope.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS will inaugurate the season in Philadelphia on Monday evening next, Aug. 22d, at their Eleventh street Opera House. During the absence of the troupe the house has been renewed, so it were, and now presents a fresh, clean and lively appearance. As the Carncross & Dixey Company are to meet with a spirited competition this season, they have made arrangements for putting on all their resources.

BARNARD'S FEMALE MINSTRELS, consisting of the following artists:—Lottie Lavelle, vocalist; Belle Georgian, jig dancer; Nellie Howard, clog dancer; Carrie Darell, vocalist; Marian Taylor, Irish jig dancer; Ida Langley, song and dance; Jennie Freeman, snare drummer; Lizzie Stanley, banjoist; Mr. J. E. Green, formerly of Dupree and Green's Minstrels; H. L. Barnard, bass; James and Johnny Kelley, song and dance; James Emerson, Irish comedian; C. W. Burgess, Ethiopian comedian, and J. A. Hill, leader of the orchestra, with C. Amory Bruce as business manager, appeared at Thomaston, Me., August 11th; Rockland, 12th and 13th, and will perform in Belfast, 15th; Bucksport, 16th; Ellsworth, 17th and 18th; Cherryfield, 19th, and Machias, 20th.

SKIFF AND GAYLORD'S MINSTRELS exhibited at Masonic Hall, Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 5th and 6th. Their route is southward. They appeared at Memphis, Tenn., in the Greenlaw Opera House, Aug. 9th and 10th.

DUPREE AND BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS GAVE TWO perform-

Circuses.

THE VAN AMBURGH MENAGERIE, managed by Henry Bernard, exhibited in Washington, D. C., on August 12th and 13th, on the spacious lot located on Vermont avenue and Fourteenth street. A vast crowd of people attended each exhibition, and on the occasion of the last performance there was scarcely standing room in any part of the pavilion. The canvas is a mammoth affair, being provided with six centre poles. There are twenty-four cages of animals, besides the baby elephant, Hannibal used by the most eminent solo players in the world, from $20 to $60. Mr. Arbuckle, of Boston, says:—"I cannot possibly say too much in favor of your Cornets." Mr. J. Levy, the great soloist, says:—"In my opinion they quite surpass every instrument of the same character that I have previously tried."

DISTIN'S
CELEBRATED ENGLISH CORNETS,

CARMEL, PUTNAM Co., N. Y., May 26, 1870.
GENTLEMEN.—I have much pleasure in saying that the celebrated Distin instruments we have purchased have given the greatest satisfaction. They are perfectly in tune, and their short, light action renders execution as easy as any rotary valve, while the tone is far superior for power and brilliancy. I shall certainly recommend them at every opportunity, as I am sure they only require to be known to ensure their preference over all others in this country, even as they are preferred in Europe. Wishing you every success,
I remain yours truly, W. JOHNSON,
B. M. Carmel Saxhorn Band.
These instruments are manufactured with the latest modern improvements and possess an evenness and equality of tone that cannot be produced upon instruments with ordinary pistons or rotary valves. List of prices and drawings mailed free. BOOSEY & CO., 4 Bond street, New York, Agents for Distin's Military Musical Instruments. Boosey's Complete Cornet Tutor, $1.50. RED DEAD BALL.
The undersigned beg to call the attention of the Base Ball fraternity, and of dealers in Base Ball materials, to the new Base Ball have recently introduced, in answer to the demand for a Ball which would possess all the life in it requisite for skilful batting, while at the same time it would not have the elasticity in its composition likely to make it dangerous to field when batted hard or thrown swiftly. Entered According to Act of Congress, in the Year 1870, By PECK & SNYDER, In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.
